PARK—Williams and Walker.
The story of "Abyssinia," the latest effort of Williams and Walker, who are at the Park Theatre this and next week, is outlined in: Ernest Johnson (George Walker) wins the principal prize in the Louisiana Lottery and gets into circumstances as he has ever seen before. He invites his friend, Benjamin Johnson (T. H. Williams) and a number of characters of the village in Kansas to accompany him in his great adventure to see the world, offering to pay all expenses. In Paris they hear a great deal about Abyssinia, and as none of them have ever been there, the host decides to change his country and visit an interesting country. The entire party makes the trip, and the misunderstanding between them and King Meek and his people forms the foundation for the strong fabric of fun which is reared about the comedians. Williams is walking while Walker rides a donkey. Their first scene is based on an argument who should ride the donkey, and is amusingly funny. Some startling scenic effects are also introduced in this scene. "Abyssinia" is by far the latest and best vehicle in which these clever colored comedians have ever appeared.
