NEWS EDITOR FOR TODAY'S ISSUE.

RITZER K. WALLING.

Beginning with today the new management of The Pennsylvanian is in complete control. The officers and editors assume their duties at once and are making plans for the conduct of the paper in the coming year. We believe it may be timely to outline our intentions for 1917-18 and to speak the entire University's interest and support, both moral and financial. In an enterprise that has only hard labor as a compensation.

Editorially we shall endeavor to be just in criticism, independent of everything but student opinion, broad-minded and impartial, trying to represent clearly the best views of the best informed to the best interests of the University. In our news we hope to cover all fields of University life, including all departments of the University, and to present it to our readers with promptness and accuracy.

In order to increase the size and capacity of the paper by inserting an extra sheet and introducing other innovations, all of which we hope to do, it is necessary that we be assured of the support of the undergraduates. It would be very much to the point if some of those men who ridicule The Pennsylvanian should be roused upon, to answer the question: "How much do you spend each year to do your part toward improving the paper?"

For the sake of doing something, no matter how little it may be appreciated by others, for Pennsylvania. The athletic teams do their share of work and receive their share of praise and blame, but the undergraduates support athletics because they cannot see a game unless they pay for it, and because they get an amusement out of athletics they do not find in the Pennsylvanian except now and then, when it goes in by accident. Nevertheless The Pennsylvanian gets all blame and no praise.

We are glad to be doing something for the University without any compensation, and even if nobody reads the paper, we would continue to do what we find best to do just as long as there is a printing press, because we think our loyalty deserves it. It is as essential to the good name of modern Pennsylvania to publish a daily newspaper as it is to have a football team, and it is equally important to the University to have a winning college daily as it is to have a winning football team.

Do our classroom readers impress upon Freshmen the importance of supporting the college newspaper as much as they do upon the same men the necessity of encouraging the baseball and football teams? We have never heard of any such a phenomenon taking place at Pennsylvania. Are Freshmen ever urged to work for The Pennsylvania? Sometimes, but not very often. It should be considered a far greater honor and privilege to work for The Pennsylvanian than it is at present. We tried to make hard work in daily competition the only means of election to the board and then by restricting the men taken on each year to a much smaller number than formally, to make it difficult to become an associate editor. Under this system only the most competent men in each class can be selected.

There are men in the University today who do the very least for the good of the paper, who are always ready to unjustly criticize, and yet if this paper were suddenly obliged to suspend publication for lack of funds, these very men, never having spent a cent on The Pennsylvania, would be the first to raise the howl of holy horror because the University cannot support a daily paper as the other universities do.
