HON. JOHN BARRETT ADDRESSES WHARTON STUDENT SESSIONS

URGED UNDERGRADUATES TO STUDY POLITICAL SCIENCE.

Diplomacy as Developed by College Men is a Conforming Profession—Great Opportunities for Expansion.

The Hon. John Barrett, president of the National Bureau of American Diplomacy, yesterday advised undergraduates in an address at the Wharton School to study diplomacy and political science in order that competent men might be found to take the place of some of those now reaping the benefits of Government.

"There is a decided lack of good men in Washington," said Mr. Barrett, "and the only way they can be replaced is by finding better men to take their places. In the past there have not been enough men in the way of studying political science and diplomacy. I can tell you positively that this is just as important a profession as medicine, dentistry, law, and should be studied just as hard to produce the capable men we need. The same may be said of the humanities. In short, a man must have a knowledge of government and society in order to be of any permanent value to his country. He must know representative men and he must be imbued with the spirit of service."

"I am glad indeed that the University of Pennsylvania—the only institution in the United States where this branch is taught—is giving such time and energy to political science as a study. In your work you will find a good deal of the history of the South American republics and these countries will be useful to you. As a preliminary to the study of political science and diplomacy, you must be thoroughly grounded in Latin American studies."

"There are twelve million square miles inhabited by Latin-Americans. The field of our sister republics is your own soil. I wish to explain that out of the twenty-one republics in the Western Hemisphere twenty are of Latin origin."

"The relations of nations are no different from those in the family, and the underlying principle is the application of the Golden Rule. The more this rule is followed the nearer we approach the time of permanent peace. There are still great problems to be solved, to be solved and to be solved. These I believe are not to be expected from you to profit by the experiences of those in the active field. While you are enjoying the pleasures of leisure, re-member that it is possible to think of the outside world and to perform your duty as a citizen of this great republic."

"Paul Killiman, president of the Wharton Association, introduced Mr. Barrett to the assembly.

"The Yeates Club.

A meeting of the Yeates Club will be held in Room 34, Coco House, this afternoon at 4 o'clock. In charge: Charles Pearson, secretary.
The exhibition of peurile basing that took place yesterday in the cheering section during the intermission between halves was a feature of the football season that we can very well dispense with. We do not blame only the cheer leaders but all those who have been at the University for more than a year and were near enough to this performance at the time to use their influence to stop it. The incident, while trifling at any rate, was undignified on Franklin Field at a public contest with other college men and outsiders present. It is certain that these persons did not appreciate the fun and called it by another name. Why is it that every upper classman who professes to have responsibility in these matters does not act at the proper time?

Yesterday's football opponents were very much weaker than anyone here had expected. Last year Franklin and Marshall scored a touchdown and a missed goal against the University, who ran up a total of forty-seven points. The position in yesterday's game was in no wise serious. The Blue and White were unable to score in the first half, having expected, last year Franklin Field, a public contest with other college men and outsiders present. It is certain that these persons did not appreciate the fun and called it by another name. Why is it that every upper classman who professes to have responsibility in these matters does not act at the proper time?

Notice to Dental Students.

Dean Kirk, of the Dental Department, has been succeeded by the class rushes between second and third-year classes previous to the lecture between members of the second and third-year classes in this department. The Dean hereby gives notice to all concerned that serious misconduct of this character, which is abhorrent to the best interests of the University, and is not consistent with the gentlemanly spirit which has hitherto characterized the student body of this department, cannot be tolerated, and that any further interference of the rule governing such cases will be treated by the committee on discipline as cause for indefinite suspension if not expulsion. It is hoped that no further suggestion in relation to this type of disorder, or any other, will be needed, and that the high standard of conduct which has been established by the student body of this department will be maintained by the lower classmen, at it has by his predecessors. Signed: Edward C. Kirk, Dir.

Wharton School Registration.

The registration this year in the Wharton School amounted to 88, as against 100 last year, a gain of about 21 per cent. During the last four years the registration has increased over 126 per cent. There is not enough room for the men in the present accommodations in Logan Hall. The Medical Department will be asked to give the use of its rooms for Wharton School work.

Banjo Club Rehearsal.

There will be an important banjo rehearsal tomorrow night, at 8:30 o'clock, in Logan Hall. All old men, as well as candidates, must be present. All new men who can play the guitar, banjo or banjorine sign. Signed: N. W. Homer, leader.

Deutscher Verein to Meet.

The first regular meeting of the Deutscher Verein will be held this evening in Houston Hall. Hereafter the meetings will be as usual on Wednesday nights. All members should come out.

Blanche Bates at the Lyric.

At the Lyric, commencing next week and remaining for a fortnight, David Belasco presents Blanche Bates for the third time and positively the last time in Philadelphia, in his phenomenally successful drama of California and the forty-niners, "The Girl of the Golden West.

Last season and the season before that Miss Bates and this great play of the gold fields were seen at the Lyric, and the annals of local theatregoers can show no greater triumph than that scored by this popular actress and the remarkable Belasco play which is her vehicle on both occasions, and to judge by the demands that is being made for seats for the engagement about to begin, that quite unusual success is to be repeated upon the third and last visit.

The whitenessomeness of Miss Bates, the enthusiasm with which she depicts the girliest of Cloudy Mornings, combined with the strength and dramatic quality of the piece and the art of the star and her supporting cast, apparently furnish an attraction that will not lose its power of appeal for some time to come. In Boston, where Miss Bates has just closed her third engagement, she was greeted by audiences that in point of size and enthusiasm displayed transcended those which received her upon her first visit to the city, and there is no reason to believe that anything else will be the case in Philadelphia. It is doubtful if this city knows a more popular actress than Blanche Bates, while the standing of David Belasco, both as playwright and producer, as shown in "The Girl of the Golden West," is sufficient to justify a third, or for that matter even a fourth, view of the production.

As an extra feature during the local engagement of Miss Bates, Mr. Belasco will present her in a series of special matinees in a revival of his tragic playlet, made from the story by John Luther Long, "Madam Butterfly." "Madam Butterfly" was written especially for Miss Bates, and in its stellar role she scored one of the most memorable successes of her brilliant career. The presentation of "The Girl of the Golden West" and "Madam Butterfly" in the same day will afford Miss Bates an opportunity, such as has never been as Mrs. De Vere in "The School of Beauty." It will afford the unusual versatility for which she has become famous.
