SOPHOMORES WIN WALL FIGHT
Event Will Become an Annual Affair.

The first meeting of the University Fencing Club will be held to morrow, as eight o'clock in the fencing room of the Foundation building. The club will meet for the first time at the present organization of the freshmen, and as their leader, Ogle, has been captured early in the term by some sophomores, it will not be called the fencers of the class.

The sophomores reached the wall first, and as soon as they got on it they stayed there, being protected by a barricade in front. The event was marked by much good spirit, and was undoubtedly made an annual feature by the undergraduate committee.

"Punch Bowl" Out To-Day.
The call for fencers for this year shows a great improvement on the latter numbers of last year. As Sophomore 08," a short poem in the spirit of the season, is illustrated. A cute sketch by the art editor, the "Big Dream," is a comic supplement in six acts, and constitutes the rest of the art work of the paper with the exception of a rather impressionistic sketch of the official abolition of hazing at Pennsylvania.

A "Psalm of Capital Cities" and "Lies to a Nature Faker" are two stories in verse of timely things in the polities of the country, and are new formularies, and appears in this otherwise humorous paper, and help to make up a number that will be a best."Punch Bowl!" best.

I declare that if College opened at eight o'clock Chapel hour, many men who are now preparing for the present time. It is declared that all the professional departments at last until five o'clock, as they do in other colleges. Arguments in rebuttal raise the contention that many men would not come to Pennsylvania if they were obliged to rise one hour earlier. There may be men who would stay away from College rather than rise an hour earlier. But if we are probably not overburdened with either brains or earnestness, and we can afford to miss such.

We may see how some men might be inconvenienced until they grew used to the change, but we fail to comprehend why our enrollment should suffer.

On the contrary, the advantages of being derived are numerous. Our coaches tell us there would be a much larger number of men able to develop themselves in athletics, which is nowadays widely an important part of a college education; our teams would be better, undergraduates would be enabled to spend more time on publications and other valuable college enterprises; our resident population would be greater; a larger number of men would be obliged to rise early to benefit us. It is our belief that the change, is assuredly fallacious. No other college than this one against the change, is assurredly fallacious. No one would be forced to live at College rather than rise an hour earlier to reach college in time; that men whose homes are in the suburbs, from which trains bring them into West Philadelphia for eight o'clock hours, would rather go to some other college than live here or rise earlier than they do.

Such an argument as this, and this seems to be the only one against the change, is assuredly fallacious. No one would be forced to live at College rather than rise an hour earlier to reach college in time; that men whose homes are in the suburbs, from which trains bring them into West Philadelphia for eight o'clock hours, would rather go to some other college than live here or rise earlier than they do.
