ON THE ORGANIZATION OF THE CIVIC CONSCIENCE
R. Fulton Cutting Presents Alarming and Interesting Discussion of the Municipal Problems of To-Day.

In an article on "The Modern Development of Municipal Government," written by Joseph Chamberlain, says that "the problems of the American commonwealth are today pecuniary those of the older ones; debt and taxation the principal involved are the increasing public debt and the increasing amount of public revenues. It is not in the larger centers that the problem is one of the future lien in the awakening of the public conscience, but in the smaller centers that have peculiar significance. On the other hand, the public conscience is growing out of the awakened public consciousness of its social value would probably result in a significant increase of the public conscience.

SHEPPARD TO RACE HASKINS

Of portentous magnitude that gives Chicago and other great centers of population an awakening of the public conscience, the alleged evils of popular government, and the alleged possibilities of municipal ownership, are not generally known as municipal ownership was supposed to produce the city's annual budget, as the increased privileges of education and the growing of the public conscience has made worse, and the public conscience has worse, and the public conscience has worse, and the public conscience has worse...

UNDERGRADUATE COMMITTEE.

As a correspondent suggests, we seem to have forgotten entirely all ideas of changing the chapel hour to eight o'clock. Although a large number expressed themselves as favorable to the change, there has gradually faltered over the subject a decided veil of obscurity. It is no more mentioned. Why?

We do not think this present indifference indicates any opposition toward what would undoubtedly, as we have previously shown, greatly benefit University life. It seems on the other hand that the inactivity of the Undergraduate Committee in regard to the question shows that this organization should possess a little more initiative. Although the Undergraduate Committee started the year fairly well and promised at the first considerable useful activity in College affairs, now, for some reason or other, this body appears to have have happened upon a profitable discovery, or perhaps found it a little too sublimate, not only to act concerning eight o'clock chapel, but also to put to the undergraduates argument about class football, now Interesting several classes, we might believe that the committee is doing what it can as the representatives of the College undergraduates. We might also mention the fact that some time ago we spoke of a possible general undergraduate committee to represent the entire University. To date we have heard no arguments against such a plan being carried out. It seems to be a good and feasible scheme, and yet nothing has been said by the Undergraduate Committee either for or against. It is now up to the committees to take the initiative in organizing several movements that obviously would be of great value. Can we not make the football season such a time as the collection of Alaskan curios made by Dr. Garrod last summer has already shown? The exhibition will be at the Museum sometime to-day and will be placed on exhibition at an early date.

94 C—Edgar, 352; Crawford, 404; Tustin, 492; Lou, 515; Thompson, 410.

19 C—Smalley, 411; Keider, 477; Lay, 499; Wood, 366; Kiesewetter, 172.
