Students Succeed in Putting Life Into Botanical Garden

The_various student groups put their skills to the test in a never-ending race against the clock in the Botanical Garden on the campus of the University of Pennsylvania. The College of Agriculture is one of several groups that has been experimenting with the new techniques of the modern botanist, gathering, studying, and preserving the plant and animal life of the campus.

The College of Agriculture, which is responsible for the development of the Botanical Garden, is one of the newest and most important institutions of the University. It is the center of a wide range of activities, including research, teaching, and service to the community. The College of Agriculture is one of the largest and most influential institutions of its kind in the world, and it is well known for its excellence in both teaching and research. The College of Agriculture is home to a large number of faculty members, and it is a center of excellence for the study of agriculture and related fields.

In addition to its teaching and research activities, the College of Agriculture is also home to a number of important organizations, including the American Society of Agronomy, the American Society for Horticultural Science, and the American Society of Soil Science. These organizations are a testament to the importance of the College of Agriculture and its commitment to excellence in both teaching and research.

DONALD K. HARRIS.

The Pennsylvania is sure that it expresses the feeling of the entire student body when it says it is with profound regret that we witnessed our school defeated by Princeton University and "cooters" went to Princeton in high hopes of retrieving the defeat suffered on Franklin Field last Saturday, but their expectations were doomed to be unrealized.

We are at a loss to account for the strange inability of the men to hit in the vital of the impending close season.

Our fond hopes of rising to first place, this year, have been gone glimmering; but let us stand by the team at home and away in the remaining games, giving them the full value of the support of good cheer, as we have royally done so far. A good finish of the season will do much to retrieve the games that have been lost.

Dr. Young Addresses Bankers.

Dr. James T. Young, Director of the Wharton School, delivered an address before the Missouri Bankers' Convention last night at Jupin, Mo., on "Commercial Regulation as a Conservative Influence."

His speech staunchly upheld the policy of regulation by the Federal Government and deprecated the lack of unity and consideration in connection with State measures. He said in part:

"These must be regulated in the great corporate interests. The program must be conservative, and should be entrusted to the Federal Government.

The purpose and form of Federal regulation are almost invariably conservative and representative in tone. Contrasted with this we have such effects of State legislation as have resulted in the truculent rule laws and others prohibiting the working of cotton, etc.

"The Federal Government in the wide sweep of its power, its slower procedures, and its broader territorial cognizance, represents the public opinion of the great bulk of the people. The future program of the business man must be, 'Let the National Government regulate.'"

Bi-Monthly Swimming Events.

The final bi-monthly swimming events of the college year will take place in the gymnasium pool tomorrow night at eight o'clock. Upon the results of the events depend the standing of the swimmers for the year. Up to the present time Skywater and Shyrock lead with sixty-five and sixty-four points respectively in their event, and it is between them and Hans, who has 65½ points, that the contest will occur. Anyone seems to be a safe fourth with forty-three points.

In addition to the regular events there will also be an Intercollegiate meet. The following schools have entered teams: Pennsylvania, Franklin and Marshall, Dickinson, Millersville, Lebanon Valley College, and Swarthmore.
