With exercises appropriate to the occasion and the University's winter holidays occurring the third week of the month, the birth of the Milton Tercentenary was celebrated by Professor Charles, English department, delivering the following address at Yesterday's Chapel Exercises.

"Justly, the Milton Tercentenary is a fitting occasion to remember and honor this great poet. Milton was a man of many traits and accomplishments. He was a learned man, a poet, a political thinker, and an advocate for religious freedom. His work, "Paradise Lost," is a masterpiece of literature and is still studied today. Milton was a man who stood up for what he believed in, and his ideas continue to be relevant today."

The ball will start tonight at 8 p.m. at the Armory. The band will march in the parade, and the ball will be held in the armory. TheAS2000 is scheduled for tomorrow afternoon on Franklin Field with the score of 14 to 6. Considering the very short time they have had, the seniors did a very good job. The senior part of the game was followed by the junior part of the game. The junior part was a very good game. The seniors were able to save up more for the game. The ball was kicked off by the captain, and the game was won by the seniors.

The junior football eleven defeated the senior eleven last Saturday afternoon on Franklin Field by the score of 14 to 6. The junior part of the game was followed by the senior part of the game. The senior part was a very good game. The seniors were able to save up more for the game. The ball was kicked off by the captain, and the game was won by the seniors.

For the Sophomore classifications the ball will be played next week in the Yard on the Main Line. The ball will be played next week in the Yard on the Main Line. The ball will be played next week in the Yard on the Main Line. The ball will be played next week in the Yard on the Main Line.

DR. CHILD’S ADDRESSES.

The Pennsylvania has the honor to print this morning part of the address delivered by Dr. Charles G. Child before the Faculty and students in the Chapel yesterday, on the occasion of the tercentenary of the birth of John Milton.

On account of lack of space we are unable to print the whole address this morning, but will conclude it in tomorrow’s issue.

We regard it a great privilege to have listened to so worthy a discourse to the good man and poet, and on behalf of the University and students wish to thank Dr. Child for his excellent address.

VANDALS.

The right of property is one of the fundamental rights of man. It is the foundation upon which our civilization stands. Disregard of this right was so serious a matter until comparatively recent times that it was punished by death. Respect of the right of property is the sine qua non of our present society, and we regard it as a disgrace that we have to comment editorially on the stealing of leaves from books of the Library by University students.

Dr. Jumon has been complaining for some time about this. Pages from the “Statistical Abstract” are missing as well as leaves from quite a few books in history. The leaves torn out evidently contain facts or figures desired by the student, but it is a small matter for a man to copy what he wants and leave the volume intact. Defacing a book in this manner practically renders it valueless, and no one having the right kind of regard for and respect for his University, his fellow-students and the property of the University would commit such depredation.

Of course it is all aphase with the actions of a certain group to be found everywhere, who, possessed of an irresponsible eye, regard all things as theirs by divine right. We are sorry to acknowledge that a few of these men come to Pennsylvania. By their acts they sometimes do a great deal of harm to the institution they should be proud to honor. Pennsylvania does not want such men. They are not men to be trusted, and we know that every Pennsylvania man will do his part toward stopping their pilfering.

Ten Minutes’ Walk to Twenty Theatres that 'immortality of fame,' slowly, with labor and unceasing as it is sure, he gathers under his banner the mighty chords, the reverberant harmonies, of the great groups, shapes forth the Samson Aeolus, nearest in English verse to its approach to the simplicity and sublimity of Greek tragedy. Who may doubt the twenty years of controversy have left their mark upon him—he is more fierce, more grim, than he has been—but where else we may ask can come the deep passions of this majestic muse? Not by any means must we conceive of the Milton of this period as the island and venerable old man of tim- ing 'Paradise Lost' to his daughters—the pathetic figure of sentimental refer- ence. Pathos there was, but of a different sort. Some happiness he knows doubtless in some measure was pleasures of his garden, in play- upon the organ at dusk, most of all in his transcendent poetic achievement and the fame it brought him among his fellow-poets even in his own day.
