Patterson tried several goals from the Varalt ten-yard line. The first efforts were missed but any man in the department is eligible to play. Coach Miller considers that with Patterson giving the ball to the Varalt line at will. The American line was then given the ball on the twenty-five yard line and barred at the ten yard line. After the second quarter Patterson tried several goals from eleven points but was kept out.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT.

At Columbia University there has been a good deal of agitation recently concerning the granting of credits in English to members of the boards of the various college papers. The question was brought up in the last meeting of the student forum at the New York Institute, and after a hour's discussion it was decided to be impossible to give credits to journalism work.

The argument pro and con are excellent. At first thought it might seem that the affirmative side is the only one. The conclusion we jump at is considering the matter is that it is no justice to take some recognition of the work of the journalists as recognition is given to athletes when they are exempted from gymnastic work because of their efforts on the field or river. Upon further thought however, the possibility becomes by no means one-sided. Not only would the granting of credits tend to introduce a material spirit into the efforts now given by the men who put out our papers solely from a desire to help their alma mater, but the mere fact that such a step has not been urged by them, particularly, in the past, seems to show that our journalism desire no faculty recognition for their work. The journalists of the campus are, to a great degree, undergraduate undertakings, as are the teams which represent the university. The kind of recognition that the men who run them want is the recognition that they get from their fellows and not a friendly slap on the back and a "keep it up boys" from the faculty; nor that the friendship of the teaching staff is not eagerly sought, but that there are rewards which to the average college man are just as desirable as those which come from the classroom.

In Syracuse, every man who takes part in a "Varsity debate is given two credits in English. There is no doubt whatever that debating does more to develop a man intellectually and to fit him for the world than almost any thing which is done upon the campus. However, in a debate certainly does an amount of good at least equivalent to two units of class-room work. Of that there is no question. Still the same argument against the plan holds good, and in most cases it would be safe to say that the men who make the debating teams would not care a rap whether or not they got units for their efforts.

Moreover, to apply the rule to publications involves numerous practical difficulties. What journals, for instance, are to be included, and are unsuccessful candidates to be given any recognition for their work? Those difficulties in the way of the plan. Still there is no fit food for thought, and perhaps a system which will bring a greater realization of the hard work done by the men whom the suggestion concerns.

KELVIN CLUB FEELS PROUD.

Dr. Kabakjian Prances Randall Laboratory Before Physics Professors.

The initial meeting of the Kelvin Physical Club was held at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon in the Randall Memorial Laboratory, and was devoted to an address by Dr. Kabakjian and the election of officers.

Dr. D. H. Kabakjian, Harrison Scholar in Physics, 1908-09, gave an interesting account of the work he carried on along this line in the Cavendish Laboratories at Cambridge University during the past summer. While working on research work under Sir Joseph Thomson, the most renowned physicist in the world, Dr. Kabakjian was investing the yellow abode in elucidated cocaine rays. Although the Cavendish Laboratories are ranked among the best in existence today, he declared that the Randall Marpan Laboratory here is fully as well equipped, except in certain special lines.

Dr. A. W. Goodspeed, who has been the head of the organization since it was founded, was again elected president; Dr. C. H. Richards, vice-president; and T. D. Cole was once more entrusted with the finances of the society as secretary and treasurer.

Men at the University of Pennsylvania are at a big advantage over fellows at the average college. They're so near to a big city noted for quality tailors that they don't have to depend on the traveling tailors who bring a couple of cases of swatches. A quarter hour brings them into the Jones Young Men's Department where they inspect all sorts and styles of fabrics in the full bolt. Easy to see what your suit will look like—easy to give your personal idea of cut and fit direct to a cutter who specializes on young men's tailoring.

And the prices are moderate—start as low as $25 for a custom made suit, that is guaranteed entirely satisfactory in style, fit and finish.
