EXAMINATION DON'T.

Weary Law School "Prof" Presents Proposals to Abolish Exams.

A few weeks ago there was an examination in Plessing, for second year men, in the Law School; William H. Lloyd, B.A., of the Philadelphia bar who has been suffering from acute nervousness ever since this exam was given, has drawn up a petition of complaint to the Law School authorities for those aspiring to climb in "the scholarly world of jurisprudence," which suggests that 10 per cent of all students in the University. The Pennsylvania* might give" some "various" studies" (as the word is used by the students) "after a "act" that cut out and past it in his hat.

1. Don't repeat the question. The professor knows it. What he wants is the answer.

2. Don't write a complete history of the subject. Just repeat what your future-foreclosed your energy to the solution of the problem before you.

3. Don't give an answer without stating your reasons in full. You are not being asked to state theorems, but to give reasons for your answers.

4. Don't talk about your studies and reasons for coming to this institution. You may give the professor a pass also.

5. Don't argue the inferences and implications in your answers. The professor is interested in your answers; he does not care whether they are true or false.

6. Don't be peevish; it is not the present question, but the authors, which we are to answer.

7. Don't write illegibly. Great men frequently write badly, but you are not a great man yet.

8. Don't leave a problem without reasoning as a whole. You may be surprised at your own answers.

9. Don't come out of the examination room and tell your answers differ from those of the other fellow who is rolling the cup.

10. After a poet mortal does not有意思 the surprise.

11. Don't be peevish; it is not the present question, but the authors which we are to answer.

12. Don't write a substitute for quitting. Write a complete answer to the question itself. Write a substitute for quitting. Write a complete answer to the question itself.

13. Don't omit anything. If the question is not covered in the course, it is a sad commentary on your method of taking notes.

14. Don't think that quantity is ever a substitute for quality. Your answer may be long, if necessary.

15. Don't write a substitute for quitting. Write a complete answer to the question itself.

16. Don't leave a problem without reasoning as a whole. You may be surprised at your own answers.

The Man Who Scores

is the man who lasts.

Occasional brilliancy in athletics or in life never results in the resultant of consistent efficiency.

The power to repeat one's best performances whenever called upon, the continuity and constancy to do always rise to the occasion is the result of right nourishment.
