FOUR BILLS AT OPERA HOUSE.
Tripf Bill This Afternoon—Tales of Hoffman Tonight.

Four different performances will be given today at the Metropolitan Opera House. This afternoon at 1 o'clock, in a triple bill, consisting of "A Lover's Quarell," "Hansel and Gretel" and a ballet, will be given, while "Les Contes d'Hoffman" is to be performed tonight. All those operas will be given with those artists who are best equipped for the parts, and the ballet will be led by Gilli, the most popular danseur of the organization.

"A Lover's Quarell," which is to start the performance this afternoon, is a new piece by Bizet, one of the company's orchestra leaders, and it has met with a favorable reception at its first performances. It possesses a highly melodious score of excellent merit, and is orchestrated in a graceful and faultless manner. The same cast that gave the piece its premiere, Scoppelli as Robert, Gobbi as Don Alfonso, and De Luca as Despina will sing the parts, while Crovetti will complete the bill.

"Hansel and Gretel," which is the second part of the performance this afternoon, is one of the most delightful and pleasant operas of the season. With a fresh and excellent appeal in a childlike way, Humperdinck has created not only a thrilling drama, but a simple fairy tale. Children are pictured in their witty and sparkling satirical manner, and the absence of any display of human emotion makes the plot a welcome contrast in the usual conventional type of operatic music. The music is admirably suited to the story, and displays a masterly handling of the modern orchestra. The parts, which are in English, are sung by Gobbi as Hansel, Crovetti as Gretel, Scoppelli as Gilli, with Olga Cusson as Hansel's mother, and the children will also have a solo number. The decoration of the stage is by Scoppelli, and the music by Humperdinck.

"The Widowers' Houses" was Shaw's first attempt at writing drama, and the original play was the first of a series of little books published about the action in the Independent Theatre of London.
