BROTHERLY LOVE A SALVATION
WILL SETTLE PRESENT ECONOMICS AND SOCIAL PROBLEMS, SAYS DR. P. CLAXTON IN SUNDAY SERVICE.

"When the relations of mankind have been firmly established on the basis of brotherly love, then will all our present-day social and economic problems have been solved," declared Dr. Philander P. Claxton, U. C. Commissioner of Education, in his address at the regular Sunday services in Houston Hall yesterday morning. Tackling his text, "Whatever ye would have men do unto you, so do ye unto them," Dr. Claxton made a strong plea for the extension and broader application of this fundamental principle of morality.

"I would rather speak to a group of college young men and young women than to any other audience at any other place," said Dr. Claxton in the course of his remarks. "For you, above all others, does the future, with its possibilities and responsibilities, depend. You have at your command unsurpassed opportunities for acquiring that training which alone enables it. You must prepare yourselves in the schools for productive, constructive workers... In the early history of all human races, when the unit of social organization was the tribe, and the spirit of strife and warfare to have been the predominant motive in the intellectual, moral and physical achievements of the people. The brotherhood of man stands at the leading place of land by right of traditional occupancy and worshiped by all mankind. The neighboring people, following other gods, gods and gods of their enemies. If the tribes had need of additional gods, it was to bring to life the three deities for their personal use. To run the followers of another god and on the act of holiness, and the destruction of falsehood, every man had the sanction of religious authority. Thus it happened that the earliest conceptions of morality were formed at a time when brotherly love was an unknown virtue.

"There was also a time when we had not learned that wealth was a participant of human life, founded into something which is represented by the dollar. Our political and civic life have carried us to the point where we can now realize that wealth is as sacred as human sweat, or toil, or even life itself. and that it rightfully belongs to those who produce. A man is no longer justified in taking that which does not belong to him. There are people who would not take a dime who conscientiously misrepresent the value of their wares. Should the United States be applied to business, or must we admit that we can not treat our fellow men to sell so good honestly! I cannot conceive of an honest merchant who has two prices or practices any other deception upon his unsuspecting patrons. Did you ever stop to think what it means to have government inspectors guarding against adulteration and fraud?

"You who make public opinion must work for the extension of the old ethic rules which summarize all the teachings and practices of the prophets. If centuries and centuries are allowed to retain ethics in society and in the church, if their crimes to be made right of their corrupt influence is bound to eat away the very foundation of our whole moral code. Robbery committed against a corporation or the government is not an immoral matter, but affects every individual in society, and makes the cooperative effort and makes cooperative effort impossible. It is for you to help bridge the great chasm between human and capital. A moral is to be come instead with the spirit of both, which is carried in towards a time of universal peace and good will;"

Walkers Do Five Miles an Hour.
The University Walkers Club, led by O. E. Germer, assistant instructor in gymnastics, made record time on their tramp to Briarcliff Saturday. Sixteen men composed the party, which started from the gymnasium. The walkers decided to cover their energy to the country roads, and accordingly took the trolley to Briarcliff, where they had lunch. Leaving Franklin at 12 noon, the trolley took the Briarcliff line and stepped off the eight mile stretch, the latter part by 2:30 an average of slightly more than five miles an hour, which is excellent time for amateurs. Several of the men returned later, while, the others waited for the 6 o'clock boat from Trenton.
