SERVICEM AIM OF ALUMNI SOCIETY

Local Organizations Unity Graduates
Of University and Extend
Her Influence
REGISTER IS BOND OF UNION

Service to the University of the strong set and most effective type is the aim which the General Alumni Society is constantly striving toward by organizing and increasing the efforts of Pennsylvania men the University throughout the country. It meets the Trustees, adds to the number of its members, and the list of its local Societies and Clauses, keeps records of the Alumni and promotes the University, and generally extends the influence of Pennsylvania. It lifts an enormous burden from the Trustees.

Among the functions of the Society is the publication of the Alumni Bulletin which was established by Professor Pever Professor in 1890. This periodical is the bond of union of the Alumni of the University and their Alma Mater, it gives the life and progress of the University, sports, news, professional numerical and historical articles. No alumna or alumna can afford to miss it. It keeps him in touch with the friends made in undergraduate days, and with the activities of one of the most important classes in the University.

The duties being mainly nominal this society of Pennsylvania makes a financial appeal, but a wide and healthy strengthening of the alumni who propose to use it in a united way for the betterment of their Alma Mater. The influence and authority which is possessed by the Pennsylvania alumni from the Philadelphia administration are received and reached through all the alumni and interested in the State and University. By means of local organizations the central office reaches out and covers this entire view, and becomes a co-operative group. This group by its united effort makes more of it a much more intelligent and efficient way than can any individual or house of the University.

It is a collection of those organizations of the University which have a national Institute with a broad base and influence. An English writer has said, "The idea of a university reach is far beyond a supply of perpetual tradition, the pedagogic growth of a degree, the material advancement of research, as the political influences of national events. It extends the boundless of such activities as far as we please, we shall discover in the end that a university is something more than an engine of utility or a product of organ growth, the essence of higher education, a principle of life and energy, and influence. And that involves every university must be the impersonation of the world's mind and all the education possible to be collected in one place."

The WHARTON ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

The announcement that within a month an active alumni association will be in existence in the largest undergraduate department in the University, the Wharton School of Finance and Commerce, augurs well for the future both of that school and of the University. For some time a temporary association of Wharton graduates has been organizing, as a means of making the work of the alumni of that school, and the need for a permanent society has long been apparent. The alumni of the Wharton School number well into the thousands, and each graduating class adds hundreds more.

Grades of the Wharton School are perhaps more widely scattered than those of any other department. In every city they are found among the leaders in the business world. The institution of this4 SOCIETY is in that manner, or to remove the scope of their violations. These houses which have hotly endeavored to abide by the terms of the agreement, should still hold to this purpose.
