When You Buy That Christmas Gift

I really don't know what to do about this rush on books, when a man can't approach you and wants to know why you went to Roope & Bly's instead of Alpha Beta, and when you pass by A. H. Lurie by, and say, "Now Johnny want a minute or two and let it sink. It isn't worth your while. You've got to meditate and think, and give our house a trial." I'm plentiful proud you don't see me. And then at Alpha Beta, a prominent promoter, I said an hour or two, until with pockets full of candy and stomach full of food, my last laudanum I gave the flakes. I plainly understood their low intentions, for I saw a hankerd of coal and knew dam well when meeting came, they'd beth me a for a god.

And then Tom Swift comes to me (he's Taka Hill's nephew) and says, "I'm not at liberty to tell you anything. I only want to let you know that everybody likes you, and if you're wondering how to do it, Taka Hill's strikes pretty well, why come around and get yourself a key, boy. And if you want some pretty sound advice, just come to me, boy.

Of course, I don't want to break this integral agreement, and so cannot understand what he meant. I like the boys at S. O. L. It may take quite a bit of getting to but I'm not here for you to quit Apple.

"PLEAS IN STOLEN TAKES!"—Headline

That head will probably be one of the most correct of his selections in the future—apparently the original owner had to search for a ticket, for a thing.

('Reply. Note: We know this is an old crack but we like to make one in a while, so as to make a not too rapid improvement for so many of our readers who also peruse Pennys, etc.

"Thank," said one of the boys who is still recuperating from the Five, the only words that can truly describe the sights and sounds of that September night.

We've seen keen disappointment registered on many a man's face but we have never anything to compare with that exhibited by a couple of chaps who ran all the way from a distant, some fifty miles, to find that the smoke coming from some rubbish in this part of the Winter Institute was in fact from College Hall.

Our idea of nothing at all—this year's Christmas vacation.

If our vacations continue to be shortened at the present rate, for the time Louis Adams Young, Jr., magnetizes student body will own the administration several days, and will probably be compelled to address classes on Sunday to make them up.

There is a man in College. Who's always chewing gum. Doesn't know if you are married. Perhaps he'll give you some.

But the column is being covered with nonsense. Cut through to do everything this week must be done to overcome this! Must we despise our talents become named with this curse of frivolity? Or will problems like the following appear in the columns?

What is the weather like? And the one in one's health. How do people without umbrellas feel today?

As it happens, Inspired when something unusual be here, we must always come to a pass in every traffic, an overhead look was removed from the junction of Woolard, Walnut and Thirty-fourth streets. The police captain explained to our investigator that a few days ago the regular operator had a nervous attack and had left the job.

The new assigned to the job got along all right until the day after he had come, they'd knock me for a goal.

And the one to talk with about 10 o'clock in the morning when he accidentally pulled a nervous breakdown and went South for his health.

A STANLEY PROGRAM NEXT WEEK

The presentation of one of Robert W. Chambers' famous novels, "The Common Law," has been selected to appear on the program of the Stanley Theatre beginning Monday, November 12. This picture has received national wide acclaim as one of the outstanding problematic productions of the year. It has been released only recently.

This cast includes a notable list of twelve stars, all of whom have made their homes of their own. Among them, Corinne Griffith, Conway Tearle, Elliott Dexter, Robert Muwurst and Denis May are well known to patrons.

The theme of the play is based primarily on the marriage question. The position of the church in the performance of the marriage ceremony is clearly outlined throughout the thread of the story. Whether the oracle of man and woman under the common law is justified in the explanation which the famous author of the novel has tried to make.

A beautiful tale of love follows from the beginning of the picture to the dramatic ending. The son and heir of a wealthy family falls in love with a girl of a very social position. A marriage by the church between the son and the girl is refused by the parents of the young man. The outcome of this relationship is emphasized by the three little sons of the church, who makes an undeniably sad picture.

Other features are included in next week's week's bill which will include the following:

STAGE ATTRACTIONS:

BORi: TO: THE CITY--Pamper Me. A popular comic number by Ruger and Sitwell who make an undeniably sad picture.

IF WINTER COMES--Announced

Fox Bill for Next Week

"If Winter Comes," the William Fox production of the novel of the favorite name by A. S. M. Hutchison, will be the feature attraction next week at the Fox Theatre.

The picture was photographed in England and many actual scenes were taken in and around Canterbury Cathedral.

Notwithstanding the surrounding circumstances on the bill will be the appearance of Frederick Pradkin, America's own violinist, who last appeared in Philadelphia with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Pradkin was a soloist in three of the most important movements of the Philadelphia music lovers.

Critics in cities where "If Winter Comes" has been shown have agreed that the pictures is one of the greatest ever offered in the history of the silent drama. The selection of Perkins, Mann and Allen Forrest, the principal roles, and the strong support ease, leaves nothing to be desired. Unlike many photographs, the action of the picture sticks firmly to the original story of the author and there are no divergences from the continuity of the story of the text.

Many audiences who have seen the book will see the picture with a new interest and will not be disappointed by any changes made by the director.
