Pennsylvania's 1924 intercollegiate championship soccer team will match its skill with that of an all-star team from Brown Field every Tuesday afternoon at 3:30.

The teams will be determined in advance at the start of the season and, barring last-minute withdrawals, will be formed on the basis of the players' skills.

The game will be an exhibition, and the players will be free to play for either side.

The game will be played on the fields of the C. A. Club in Philadelphia.

The game will be played under the rules of the National Collegiate Athletic Association.

The game will be played on the first day of the season.

PENNSYLVANIA GOVERNOR ADDRESSES CONFERENCE

State Executive Offers Assistance in Enforcement of Prohibition at Commencement.

"VIOLATION BREEDS CONTEMPT"

As a part of the program of the Conference on Good Citizenship, Governor Patrick delivered the following address before a large audience in Washington Hall yesterday afternoon. He was introduced by President Penman and preceded by Rev. Father J. J. O'Brien, who said, "The bootlegger is just as much a traitor to his country as the crooked politician," and who added: "The country would be better off if we had no politicians at all." The Governor's remarks were received with applause.

"When old Tama Jim Wilson, Secretary of Agriculture at Washington, asked me to take charge of the little old Dis-tion of Prohibition many years ago, I set out to prepare for the big job which I know was coming—putting the enforcement of Prohibition in order. They had not only been appointed to every possible war, but they had failed to do the work. It was impossible to believe that the men in charge of these affairs were honest and competent. The situation was not unlike the present situation in law enforcement. There was a great money prize for breaking the law and the people had lost all confidence in the officers who were enforcing it.

What we have today is exactly what I want to see now. I found for a fact a lot of some college men, very recent graduates for the most part, who were willing to take up this work, and I put them in

MAKING A DREAM COME TRUE.

In the interest of this paper, an article in this column hinted at the fact that the idea of Dr. Alexander Melville is too idealistic for this day and age. Not so, Dr. Melville, and Dr. James Melville, and Dr. Alexander Melville, and the others who follow. We are behind you and will be here to do that. Of a better relationship between student and instructor who have much to say. Right now, however, there is a crying need for some means of communication between the two at the desk and those in the family office.

Net a day passes that we do not hear some pneumonia criticise one course or another. Not a day passes that we may not feel the same way. And what makes it all the more maddening, the only thing we can do is talk to the instructor and give him our views, and, I think we are creating. If a number of you go to an instructor that looks like an any. And yet, as more of a matter of opinion, there is a great deal of evidence that most successful students really want to obtain the student viewpoint on the contents of a course.

The situation of the telephone in which the student and professor can talk and learn from each other. It is not only a great benefit to both sides to find out what the other fellow is doing at.

Starting with this proposition, and lists have your ideas on the subject. We ourselves have a lot more to say in the matter. It will help us to have your thoughts to work with as we go along.

DOWNWARD AND UPWARD.

The sensational victory over West Point on Saturday seems to show the result of the increased interest in the game. The students and the manager, who are primarily responsible, and also in the position of the Cardinal in the.

Last night, the Navy's basketball team arrived in Philadelphia and was met by a large crowd of fans. The team is expected to play several exhibition games during the month of January. The games are expected to be well attended.

charge. They were men with the college man's point of view. They believed in what they believed in. They were willing to fight for it to the last ditch, and there was not a single rowdy streak in the whole body.

I put them in charge in the fall. Some of them lost a million acres to look after—some of them a good many more. All of them were in charge of probably the greatest amount of property which has ever been placed under the care of an individual, and all of them were in charge of property which is probably the most valuable in this country.

The result was exactly what you would expect. Not a single one of these college men ever went wrong—not a single one ever laid down and quit—not a single one failed to stand the guilt and deliver the goods. They took only a little while to convince the West that whatever else was crooked, the Forest Service was straight—that whenever else was half bailed, the Service knew its business—that whenever else could be blamed off the sidewalk, the heart of the Forest Service was straight. That is the land was concerned, utterly and completely, and it is so now.

"I am sure that no one who has seen the work of forest rangers in the mountains, and who were responsible for it, could ever travel the rough country day or night and take care of themselves and their charge under any circumstances. But I do say that the thing that lifted the managements of the National Forests out of the mess of open, irresponsible, and failure, and earned for it at first the grudging respect and finally the wholehearted loyalty of the Western people, was the straightness of the young men.

"The question of forest conservation was the most tremendous and the most serious national problem within in the whole future management of the Forest Service. And this problem was inolved.

"The young college men who organized and went on the land, and held the land tenaciously and in good conscience, were a great fundamental issue in which our whole national welfare was involved.

"The world is a great university, and the Forest Service was one of the departments. We were asked to do the work of the Service in this great university, and we did it, with the result that it was we who came out of the Service uncorrupted, and it was we who came back to the world with the full conviction that we can do the work of the Service as long as it was our duty to do it.

"I am present to urge you to the very uttermost of your strength, by every means at your command, to get the law that has been passed. We are not holding back. All we ask is that you close the door and let us do our work.

"You represent the new day. You are the new generation, the new youth of the world. You have the opportunity to build the world, and you have the opportunity to save it.

"I ask you, if you are a student, not to be afraid of the New Day, but to go forward with it. If you are not a student, you are not only a student, but you are an old man, and in the face of the new generation, in the face of the new youth, you must not be afraid. You must not be afraid.

"LAW" AND "MINISTRY" TOPICS OF LECTURES
Two very distinguished Philadelphians will be the speakers at this week's Vocational Lectures, namely, Stephen Rock- shaw and Dr. Alexander McCall. Mr. Rockshaw, who will speak on "The Law as a Profession," is a graduate of both Harvard College and Law School and is a member of the Philadelphia Bar Assn- 4ication. He is prominent in local politics and is a very capable lawyer.

Dr. McCall, whose topic will be "The Ministry as a Profession," is pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church at Twentieth and Walnut Streets. His outlook is broad, having been a business man and a newspaper writer before he entered the ministry. He is a graduate of the University of Edinburgh. His "Jack" Hart speaks of him as the most religious man in the city.

After the address, time will be pro- vided for questions. Both speakers will welcome any inquiries which students may care to ask. The lectures will be held in Houston Hall at 4 o'clock this afternoon, and an invitation is extended to all students of the University who may be interested in the subjects.
