Problems of Finding Center Seeds to Be Solved in Preparing for Practice

JAYVIES PLAY AT MALCOLM

Pennsylvania's chances of producing a good baseball team this year seem increasingly by the appearance of "Bob" Shore at the last practice. The problem of finding a center on whom the attack can be built has grown in the course of the season and Shore is proving to be a valuable asset.

At the last practice Mr. Stevens, coach of the baseball team, announced that Shore will be used in the center position. The move is expected to increase the power of the attack. Shore is a good base runner and has a fine arm.

The teams who really want to help out the Kite Society in the sale will do it with two of the neighboring board to another athletic classic.

There is an increasing interest in an endeavor which has not been the case. We must maintain the development of the thirty-seventh year. Among this number was the late Henry L. Seigle, of the Class of 1919, in whose memory a tablet at the southeast corner of the stadium was unveiled last fall. Realizing that the experiment has proved a success, Pennsylvania at home might do well to leave all our colors, and to wear the little black caps around the basketball board in the country, a direct wire to the Ferry's Super-Value 1924.

Twixt Devil and Sea

How could She know the distress in which his alarm clocks.

The students intending to go to the California game are warned that today is positively the last day for the departure of those who are going by bicycle, roller skates or foot.

Three of the boys absent-mindedly took all of their books home for some reason, so they are beginning to pay strict attention in class. The students and the graduates—and at the same time to arouse an increased interest in an endeavor which brings much credit and fame to Pennsylvania.
PENNSYLVANIA STANDS TWENTIETH IN ENDOWMENT

30 OF 58 DRIVES HAVE FAILED

Many people are under the impression that large universities such as Pennsylvania are, because of their size, necessarily rich. The common belief is that the more students a university has the more money it makes. However, as Dr. Penman pointed out in his address at the opening exercises last fall, this idea is entirely false. Against the opposite true. It was shown at that time that while a student pays but some $300 or $400, it actually costs a university around $900 to give him his education.

This condition would seem to infer that a large institution is not entitled to depend upon state aid and an endowment for its main support.

Delving into the available figures, it is clearly apparent that this is the case. Harvard, although it is in a large city, is well able to face the same problems that Pennsylvania has to solve. Harvard is endowed to the amount of $8,000,000. Chicago, another university located in a large city, is endowed for $22,600,000. In 1925 they are planning to raise an endowment fund to raise $75,000,000, and in ten or fifteen years hope to raise this amount down to $100,000,000. Pennsylvania stands twentieth from the institutions of highest learning of the country. The University is at present endowed to the amount of $12,799,041.

During the last five years 60,-000 students and colleges have held open-end funds for various amounts. Thirty of these have failed to make the same amount that they set as their aim. In discussing the present underendowed status and the apparent need of Pennsylvania for a greater endowment.

Do you work Sun December 27, so that your Christmas vacation will be rather belated. The team will face the Queen's College quintet, winners of the Canadian championship last year, on New Year's Day and on Saturday, January 3, the Inter-League Conference contests will get under way. Yale will face Pennsylvania in the opening league contest, and this really starts the crucial part of the season.

Following the Yale and Queen's game, Pennsylvania will oppose the Red and Blue on the court on Tuesday, January 6, in what promises to be an important clash. This assignment calls for three weeks within a week, and Coach McNichol is not neglecting an opportunity to practice, so that the fee to be in shape for the hard task facing it.

The Junior Varsity quintet will open its season tonight against the University Athletic Club team in Manhattan, and as they have practically the same record last year, their chances of making a record appear equal. Again against the Varsity this season the Speaker combination has been able to hold its own, several times building the regulars at the end of a half.

MAsk and Wig Club Will Entertain Yale Players

Officers of the University Mask and Wig Club will occupy a complimentary box at a production given by the Yale Dramatic Association Saturday afternoon, December 22...

The selling of the play "The Golliwog," written by the late Richard Harding Davis, follows the entertainment. The Mask and Wig Club will give a smoker in the hockey clubhouse on Market Street, both of the Yale players. Graduate members of the club will entertain with several skits. Dramatic skits and a group of prominent Yale men are expected to be there.

This exchange of good will marks an other step in the promotion of friendly relations between Yale and Pennsylvania. The placing of Yale on the Pennsylvania schedule for next season represented the best negotiations at our kind between the two schools for a number of years. It is believed that these two events will go a long way toward restoring the old-time Morrisfield-Billard friendly rivalry that was evident when in evidence the two schools a number of years ago.
