WALNEV - "Mighty, Prude." The first annual entertainment staged on the Theatre-Tramway Club was a tight and excellent affair and showed careful effort on the part of the workers behind it to make the occasion worthy of remembrance. George F. Cohan was slightly late in arriving, but Raymond Hitchcock proved an equal master of ceremonies. And when Mr. Cohan did step on the stage, what an entrance! It was a fine tribute to the man who has worked so assiduously and rigorously to help make the theatre what it is today. The various numbers on the bill have followed in rapid order, all being well received. Warner and Warner did a stunt from the "Sweet Little Devil" comedy, Pleasured Mills song the famous "Shadows" song, and incidentally, proved the star of the evening. While following up several solo-makers, while Louise Brown, Kath lena Mahoney and a quartet, all of the "Daily News and Mary" company did a ballet dance, song and dance-steps, respectively. Joe Leconte Jr. did a hit with his partner and introduction of the various numbers, having taken Mr. Cohan's place after the conclusion of the fourth number. Between the acts, Mr. Leconte introduced, with a song, Mr. Cohan with a large portrait of himself, to which the audience responded in a witty, any one, voice. "From "Mossman Tools to the 'Best People'" and musical numbers by Paul Speer and his ensemble composed the program. Unfortunately, Constance Bliss, Zimpy, Jimmy McKey, and Genevieve Taba were unable to be present, otherwise the entertainment would have continued longer than expected.

These were several more acts, not especial novelty, but aside from this the evening was well worth listening to and the club is to be congratulated on its deserved success. For the first minute before he is held in this city.

WALNEV - "The Best People." This new play by David Grey and Avery Hopwood certainly left a favorable impression upon those watching the opening performance at the Broad last evening. The play was written with a sense of humor concerning the absurdities which arise from the habit of handed-down dialogue and a certain ability to see what was not seen in the one of the most delightful and refreshing plays of the season.

But there were, two disappointments that might be noted in passing in the first show, one the songs with Millie and Alex, were of opposite types—a stream and always probable, though sometimes barely possible. And another, the fact that one of these two should teach Sharon, the daughter of a fashionable milliner, the art of "crocheting" almost reveals what improbable situations. Aside from these two points, however, there seemed to be no other flaws to disturb the rhythm and continuity of the production.

Phineas Johns, playing the part of the chorus girl, Millie, was faultlessly as the lead. But though she gave a capable rendition of the role she was certainly not the main female character. To our mind, Helen Johnson, casting the role of Marion Lennox, the milliner's daughter, clearly outshines the rest of the bill. Her acting was very clever, and restrained marked and effective.

Among the men, Bertie Lawrence, the son, done to新政, was exactly the best of the male. For a part such as he had there was great possibility for over-emphasis, but so admirably did he handle the situation that his work marks him as an outstanding actor. Yet Charles H. Hul, his father, was a close second. He was the type of father that more fathers might be. Actors who have done their best. Margaret Dale, as his wife, and E. Long, who played the role of the son, heaven-shudderers.

The entire production had a dominant note of spontaneity about it that was exhilarating, that gave one a sense of true pleasure. And the Best People, one, Ja Hunt and Company, for the range of this play was less rigid, thereby giving more chance for regularity in form and manner. Indeed, the production was to be "the best people" for this type of show.
