The newspapers seem to be unnecessarily excited about the great disturbance thought to be an earthquake at last Saturday night. It wasn't an earthquake at all, but merely a last-minute cancellation from the fox-hunting scene.

Any one having attended this man's University for any time at all knows better than to be excited by furniture being thrown about here and there, glazing being broken.

We would be willing to wager that any Penn man would have quit quietly through the great California earthquake unless someone yelled 'Roosevelt.'

The tremors as recorded by seismographs at various institutions can be accounted for by the theory when a certain well-known basketball team fell off its perch on Saturday night.

An advertisement asking its reader 'Does look inside a need water pipe?', encourages us very much. We had thought life had no more thrills for us and were prepared to spend the rest of our existence in terminal awe, but it seems there is still one more thrill left to be anticipated.

The news reports a man arrested after an automobile accident who was carrying $200 which he had intended to use for the purchase of some liquor. The news came as a bombshell because one of the students who told people will still take chances on such cheap stuff.

If Mark and Wig reserves one night for the facility only we have a feeling they are going to be surprised to find the first floor entirely empty.

We suggested for this week's boom the clip who answered for three men in ability to send his own name in the Philobolus roll call and then didn't stay for the lecture.

We have suggestions that the student who said he was going to be a senator will face the problem of whether he will go for the Penn or buy a hot dog.

The news about the university is going to be a problem to any people who still take chances on such cheap stuff.

LITTLE CAMPUS TALKS NO. 17

Once there was a student who went into a telephone booth and after successfully getting his number, was about to hang up when he remembered that the coin return for his nickel.

The crew management is hard at work on the Schicklgruber, trying to dig out a fresher oarsman who fell off a shelf yesterday. They hope to announce his reinstatement in tomorrow's Pennsylvania.
