We have often pondered upon the insinuation of brave death but we never really grasped how it could be so easy yesterday. While we were in the barber shop getting slicked up for vacation—having assumed as billi-eyes an attitude as possible in order to bolster his interest in being himself in a new barbers—we noticed a man slip into the chair next to ours. The barber asked him a question. The customer answered with a painted expression and nodded his head. Instantly from all parts of the shop came displays of hairdressers, bootblackers, hair-dressers, shampoo experts, barbers, bootblacks, hairdressers, massage experts, manicurists and other assistants. The barber effectively snatched the corn with later events. The more the barber and before the poor putzter himself free the bundles had shaken his hair out of its. We didn't find out until afterwards that the poor fellow was deaf and didn't know what he was getting into. Deaf death is certainly tough.

Dave Brooks gave us a tip that conservatives would not be the fashion among students during the Easter holidays.

And speaking of Easter, we might announce for the benefit of those who have not received back reviews, in order to work to do, that the C. A. A egg roll will be held on Woodland Avenue, as usual. Problem will be given a harding.

However, the idea is good. Much could, no doubt, be accomplished by concerted action. We might even get out of a gray class.

And think of the holiday that might ensue if the campus were in the conventional manner and restored to perkiness.

LITTLE CAMPUS TALES

Once upon a time there was a Senior who was imprisoned and received the balance of his deposit back from the honor.

We must hasten to correct a statement that we made yesterday. The object that "come hurtling through the glass partition between the Pennant Bowl office and ours" was not a chair at all. The color of the bowl told us today that he was merely throwing out of his office a barber who had subjected a joke about "black and white".

Style leaders tell us that the Temple Home out will be all the rage this spring.

From the columns of a contemporary we learn that William Beeler, who by the way, is no relation of ours, is locating in California and has just found a job that he feels is a perfect of his. Probably this group of sport fans is nothing more than some chauvinistic water polo team that has the height and tone to need.

SIDELIGHTS ON FOOTLIGHTS

Every little detail from the beginning to the end of "Chauve-Souris" was as interesting and well-enacted that I felt as though last Monday was by far the most pleasant and diverting evening of any which it has been, so far, my pleasure to experience in Philadelphia playhouses. Now, of course, I can utterly impress with the results of the process, or perhaps the effects are still quite vivid in my mind; or, at least, the company of Dr. Harbeson and the meetings with Mr. Reading during the three minutes doubtless added to the agreeable afterthought. Whatever the reason, however, the fact remains that the offering as a whole left me quite profited in regards to its general excellence and high artistic attainment.

Ballet, manifested as ever, made the usual appearance between the numbers and delighted us with its grace and inspective humor. Somehow or other, his broken English always makes a hit with the audience, interpreted as it is with the most whimsical pantomime and facial contortions. Yet this register is an art minor in this business, a task demanding skill and a godtly knowledge of comic psychology, and comparatively demonstrates his ability to meet with any participants by those present. He has incorporated new and unusual features in this latest and most successful of attempts, the scenery, costume and general effect being a testimony of this fact. It is a tribute to his long and successful work with the company that he meets with such cordial and repeated receptions wherever the last Theatre has an appearance.

There were several numbers on the program which were very touchingly and realistically put on, representing, as they did, the ideas of the situation. One of these was "Love in the Banks," a church wedding to be held on a pier and skit.

The sinking in the figures of the Spanish Ballets. A marvel twise number, to be sure. Then, too, "Stenka Razin," an excellent in the life of Dostoevsky's Jesse James, shone careful delineation in acting and makeup.

And again, "By the King and by the Queen," with the French ballroom atmosphere, easily the most obvious of the sketches. Yes, and "The Four Corners" could not be omitted, for it pretended a delightful dig at opera in general. If you wish just one good laugh from a performance, go down and see "Chauve-Souris" on this account alone, and understand why this is such a fa-
