SERVING
TWENTY-FIVE MILLION

PROBABLY no one of the many thousands entering a Browning King store each day realizes the size of the organization operating the store, or the countless number of both hands and lands contributing to the apparel for men and boys displayed there.

In this merchandise you see only the finished products. You do not see the sources of raw materials or the many steps of transportation and manufacture; the vast sheep ranches in Australia from which came the wool; the historic mills of England and Scotland weaving the fabrics; the silk being transported from Japan; the great factories of Browning King & Co., with their multitudes of cutters and tailors, making the clothing; the buyers of Browning King searching the markets of the world for fine apparel to be offered to Browning King customers.

Nor can any one of the Browning King stores by itself convey any definite impression of Browning King as a "National Institution". To realize this you must view the store as it appears on the map with all the other Browning King stores. There you have the nation and a "National Institution" together. From Boston on the Atlantic to Seattle on the Pacific are the great centers of population set forth by the Browning King stores. There you see how Browning King & Co. provide Browning King apparel and Browning King service to communities with an aggregate population of more than 25 million people.
