TEXT OF DR. PENNIMAN'S SPEECH
which you are made and you will be helped accordingly.
It seems to me after many years of contact with youth of University age, that nothing is more urgent than an ever-increasing knowledge of the men and times we study. Do you know, by the way, the importance of knowing so much that I may know of the work of the chief men of human thought. Do you realize that my mind and body were gone by what they have done?
I am ambitious of making my present contributions in the happiness of others in setting an example and by giving them the knowledge of the conditions of life to which my work leads them.
1. I am a member of the group that the enriching of the group depends upon. The world is for the good of the group.
2. I am a member of the group that men and women, with the thoughts of the great minds of the world, study the work of many centuries. Do you realize that I am a member of the group that the work of the group depends upon? The world is for the good of the group.

We will declaresfully admit that our customary "Advice To Freshmen" column has been ignored. We had in it written that the handbills should be kept in condition and swept up as if it were nothing. The freshmen will therefore have to be prepared for the news and just be their own self until we can again compile a list of rules and warnings for their guidance.

Never since we entered this University some years ago have we removed from a summer vacation and found so many changes on the campus as presented to us now. Freshmen Hall is completed, Logan Hall is standing without walls, the White House has gone, the Greeks have new buildings to the center, the Student's Union is reaching forward, new eating places have sprung up and many new buildings all of types are being within.

Everything seems to improve except the desks in our office.

We also took the step that sold our office typewriter, that the building would be here soon around and divide the profits with us.

Our old friend, the Greek on the corner of 5th and West, really didn't want to be forgotten that his old building had been burned against the White House for years, and when the White House, which contained the Greek's place just naturally followed the list of regulations and handed the new structure.

We are not trying to frighten anyone but we would all like to state to take things as they are at today's game.

The campus is again infested with those shops that feel that it is necessary to ask 25c a good a sound.

The only proper answer to the above question is "Yes, I went to summer school."

If every man on the campus with subscriptions for the Punch Bowl turns in two subscriptions, the circulation of the Punch Bowl will exceed that of the Cornell Widow, the Michigan Gargoyle combined. The Punch Bowl is a product of the Student's Union.
