AT KEPLINGER'S
Alone may be the call for undergraduates in all classes to participate in the various campus activities since the avenues for men to enroll for service work expanded by the University Christian Association. For the traditionalist it is difficult to understand the relation of an era of social institutions for men with welfare work for boys. The growth of Pennsylvania has in the past shown that in the medium through which world-famous lecturers and presidents of students has developed admirably, the usefulness of departmental associations has advanced considerably. It is impossible for the University, itself, in the better leadership developed among undergraduates, to carry on the work of college and college men of "the other kind." Most University men have been reared when children, have every advantage towards a healthy and normal development. On the other hand, thousands of young men in the city lack the facilities and space in which to play, not to mention the far greater handicap of inadequate home training. Because of the death of labor resources, they are left the outlet of the streets with its harmful and industrious seductions.

With a view to saving the younger generation from his environment, young men are needed to organize the boys into clubs and to "big brother" them as individuals. Clubs promote usually call for periodic meetings, at which educational and ethical subjects are discussed and other University men introduced to the members. It is happily arranged so that a maximum of the world's work will be required with a minimum of benefit to be gained.

University House and University Camp have long since been recognized as accepted Pennsylvania institutions, because of the many students who have given generously of themselves in this service and who have in turn developed their latent powers of leadership and have broadened their outlook on life. It is to be hoped and expected that the present generation will "carry on," that the sake of the boys the service and themselves.

ENCOURAGING THE CULTURAL

In recent years programs have been and are as the usefulness of departmental associations have been advanced outstandingly. The champions of the cause of the associations declared that some form of departmental organization was essential to the seniors, and that they also were of invaluable aid to the faculties of their respective schools. But those who advocated their dissolution rebuked these arguments with claims that the associations had outlived their usefulness. During the period of controversy, the three departmental associations then in existence, namely, V'Kartoon, Arts, and Science and their successors.

FINDS ANCIENT TEMPLE

Temple of Ashtaroth Uncovered by Alan Brown After Four Years of Unceasing Labor

TREASURE OF BIBLICAL HISTORY

The excavation of a temple, during the last few weeks in the tomb of King David, was announced yesterday in a telegram received from Alan B. Brown, field director of the University of Pennsylvania expedition in Palestine. The discovery of this ancient structure was fourfold several days ago by another cable from that it has beenзван to light. The importance of the expedition's discovery may be realized if we except the last chapter of First Samuel in the Bible. And they put his armour in the house of Ashtaroth and then fastened his body to the walls of Bethshemesh. So the tabernacle is not the Temple of Ashtur, as the Bible calls it, but has been brought to light. The temple is an ancient structure with two columns on each side. Within the columns was found a case of foundation deposit, containing among other things a fruit of gold, a gold and silver offering. It is hoped that gold and silver offerings and other offerings will be found in those portions of the house yet to be excavated. A question of prime interest in connection with the excavation is whether or not Saul's armor will actually be within the temple. The opinion of Doctor E. H. Gordon, head of the University of Pennsylvania, Museum, is that the answer is yes. Dr. Gordon says, that it is the burial of Saul.

Incidentally, it is directly due to the efforts of Dr. Gordon that the House of Ashtaroth was uncovered. Using the Biblical suggestion given above as a guide immediately following the world war, he made a survey of Palestine and, in the course of this survey, ascended the Mountains of Gilboa. After using the Bible as a guide, Dr. Gordon went over the details of the battle on this mountain and succeeded in deciding upon the bowmen of the House of Ashtaroth, settled for the placing of Saul's armor, thus reconstructing his final defeat. Influenced by Dr. Gordon picked Beau in the start of the expedition and located for them the site of the temple. When the excavations are complete whatever is found will be the property of the University of Pennsylvania Museum, this arrangement having been made by Dr. Gordon with the British Government in 1919.

If your hair looks natural, you can wear it without using any hair lotions, or it is difficult to manage. But if your hair is too oily, it is very easy to give it that rich, glossy, refined and orderly appearance, so essential to the well groomed man.

Just rub a little Glisten through your hair once or twice a week, and the result is marvelous and, early morning, just as you would with a comb. Glisten makes your hair look clean and makes it easy to comb. Then, every morning, you will stay in place all day.

A large bottle of Glisten costs but a trifle at any drug store.

Due to the tremendous growth of the student body during the past few years, an organization trading under the name, Student Stores Corporation, has sought to provide on the campus a group of new showrooms to reliable merchants to display their wares.

This Corporation has built an imposing brick structure in the form of an arcade at the corner of 32nd Street and Woodland Avenue, which is now opening its doors for the student trade.

A group of dignified Philadelphia merchants, whose advertisements are grouped on this page, have taken showrooms in this new building in hopes of serving the students with their merchandise.

The stores are of such a character, that working together, are seeking to fill every student need.
