Ever drop a heavy date?

The following conversation was recorded by the editors immediately prior to going to press.

To the Editor:

Yale graduates and undergraduates as well as Pennsylvania men have asked me why we did not hold a make dance and celebration in New Haven following our glorious Hurricanes. Newspaper reporters have inquired why we did not stage a late-night parade and bonfire in Philadelphia. To these I regret, in substance, that Yale by her heroic stand in the second half of a point where she threatened devastation—deserved better than a wild denunciation at the hands of her opponents.

Following the final whistle, I watched the Pennsylvania cheerleading section disperse. There was no attempt on their part to monopolize the glory of a hard battle. So well did they appreciate the spirituality displayed on the field, that they flitted out of the East with only a feeling of marked respect for the fighting Yale eleven. In this all Pennsylvania men concurred.

There was no victory celebration.

YALE STUDENTS HURT

As it is being added disaster to Yale's most unfortunate week-end, a professor and fifteen geology students were injured last Sunday when a platform, built out from the wall of the Pinkland quarry at Middlebush, Conn., collapsed. Burying them downward over jagged rocks into a slimy, icy pool of water forty feet below. Although several of the men were able to cling to the top of the wall or the platform beams, thereby escaping with only slight cuts and bruises, the majority fell the entire distance, receiving much greater injuries. Three students are now at the Middlebush Hospital in a serious condition.

The students formed a field expedition west out from Yale University under the direction of Professor Richard Flitch to study the formation of quarry, ice, and talus deposits, which are so plentiful in the walls of the quarry. Rock has been taken from the quarry for several years, and the bottom of the pit was filled with jagged protrusions. Fortunately, there was enough water covering the rocks to break the students' fall and save them from being instantly killed.

Despite the three feet of water, however, the men were badly cut by the sharp-pointed stones. Geologists and those escaped turned to the scene of the disaster, where they found the tragic felling in a pile, many of them unable to move and others struggling in the muddy water. Professor Flitch, despite his own injuries, heroically splashed from one unconscious form to another, trying to drag them to a place of safety. Among those who sprang to safety was Stewart Harvey, of Lake Forest, Illinois, guard on the Yale football team, who saved the life of his nearest companion, Clinton M. Bldwell, of Pasadena, California, by dragging him from the collapsing scaffolding. Raymond W. Lap- land, son of the donor of the Lapham Field House and a prominent athlete, jumped from the platform and climbed the rock, slipping three or four yards before finding a handhold.

Fletcher Cottin, one of the injured, said that the accident happened in a moment, and that the first indication anyone had that something was wrong was the cracking noise. "I was standing on the edge when I heard a sound," said he. "A moment later we were hurrying through space. A third of the way down we all fell a rock and then all went dark for the rest of the way. Most of us came to when we hit the water, but Dana was washed out of the three feet of water unconscious."

boards. University houses and local clubs stamp. A detailed account of the grading, class and individual players of the students of the class are contained in this volume. As a means of information in later years, these books are likely to prove of invaluable assistance to their owners.

In its early stages the Record was clearly a publication connected with the Senior Class, but gradually it has spread until it encompasses every class and all the activities. This action makes it representational of all the classes and not entirely a volume for members of that grade. But the present editors are doing all in their power to make this year's issue even more comprehensive in all activities.

The Class of 1927 is on the trough of the wave, it has downgraded its academic image. Due to the fact that the majority of the members of the Undergraduate Council have assumed the role of political leaders in various fields, the Class of 1927 is no longer a respected body on campus.

Twelve-seventy-three, since its birth as a class in Pennsylvania, has ceased to be the subject of a few of criticisms. Two years ago, the Undergraduate Council Twice postponed the election of permanent class officers, the first time because of the lack of a representative slate, the second time because of a minor field of competition seeking office. But the class seemed to respond to the occasion after it had withheld the ballot of critical remarks and threats hurled at it, only to stick back their laggard state last year. Premature Feel contests were neglected, class functions were not supported, and in general, the class was dead.
