and fifty workers were present in the last two days.

The new Christian Asiastic Society has been formed in the University. The society has been created to foster a better understanding of the teachings of the Christian faith and to promote the welfare of the students of Asian background.

Belevue-Stratford money is the cause. Over $1000 was subscribed since the closing of the society.

Mr. McKenzie explained the situation as follows: The gymnasium was built in 1926, for about twenty thousand men and the spectator accommodations were ample at that time.

We now have six thousand men and five thousand classes, some admitted to as many as two thousand men. In addition to this, the gymnasium is part of the locker rooms, and track and track and field meets are carried on there. As a result, these changes, as well as the overcrowding in the locker room under the stands and who will not be able to use the locker except for minor temporary storage, who will be allowed to use a locker outside at the boathouse, and who uses it, except for minor temporary storage.

Mr. McKenzie believes that no use of lockers except for minor temporary storage.

YALE FIRST COLLEGE TO PLAY BASKETBALL

Inaugurated Sport in 1901; Played Pennsylvanians in First Intercollegiate Contest

GAME DESIGNED BY CANADIAN

Yale University has been making rapid progress in the intercollegiate basketball league during the past season but in looking back over the records of the season it is found that Yale was really the pioneer college in the sport game. It is with pleasure that The Pennsylvaniaian publishes the following article which was written for old Yale alumni by Ralph Morgan, Secretary of the Intercollegiate Basketball League.

Yale has played a great part in the development of college basketball. It was Yale that introduced the game to the colleges many years ago. It was an suggestion from Yale in 1895 that Pennsylvania formed a team to play what was probably the first intercollegiate basketball game at New Haven in February, 1905, Yale winning 23-0. Yale also played Trinity in 1897, and existing records do not show whether Yale was first player or non-player of Yale's players of that day, but at any event, Yale was the first win.

It was a Yale man, J. E. Clarke, one of Yale's 1992 team, who introduced the game at Harvard in 1901, when he was student at Harvard's Law School.

It was Yale that formed the original Intercollegiate League in 1895. It was a Yale man, R. R. Hyatt, Captain of Yale's Champion 1895 team, who suggested the formation of a College Basketball Committee in 1895.

The same R. R. Hyatt was elected to the presidency of the present Intercollegiate League when it was formed in 1899, and a Yale man, William McMillan, Jewelry Repairing, Engraving

FOOL'S ADVICE
By Edgar A. Singer, Jr.
University of Pennsylvania

The attractive volume consists mainly of letters given by Professor Singer to graduate and graduating students to help them through the confusions and conflicts of the mental life that is their second nature. The letters are full of practical advice and have the appearance of the work of an experienced master. They provide a guide to the students of the present day who are in the same position. THE PASSING OF STUDENT SELF-GOVERNMENT IN THE DORMITORIES

Counselors with the opening of the second term postgrad student self-governance in the University dormitories was supplanted by a system which is calculated to bring about more prompt and decisive action in dealing with offenders. The permanent members of the Executive Council exercise an influence over their neighbors in the event of fresh representatives and their assistants, being no longer residents. The new rule to provide for the appointment of resident assistants in freshmen dormitories as assistants to the senior advisers is of great importance to the direction of the new government.

The administration of the new government is helped in the hands of an Executive Committee of seven members, consisting of three presidents, two senior advisers, two representatives from the upperclassmen and the dormitory superintendents. This body consists of the former executive council which was composed of seven members chosen exclusively from the roster of the senior advisers and house representatives. At least three members of that council were students in their first academic year, usually freshmen residents.

The dissolution of the self-governed system absolves all freshmen residents from responsibility for the actions of fellow-residents and neighbors. This means simply that the freshmen representatives and their assistants, having no power in any way official, must seek the assistance of the regular body or the dormitory superintendent in the event of disorder or disturbances.

This system also reduces the presence of three persons and the supervision of the University dormitories in the executive body secures a continuity of administration and ensures a regularity in the action in the event of dealing with violators of the dormitory regulations. There is more assurance of prompt handling of cases, which in itself would strengthen the hands of the authorities in the handling of the situation.

Whether the adoption of a stronger government in the positive sense will offset the loss of the preventive influence of the old form of government, only an actual trial will reveal. At any rate, the new system has the virtue of being less cumbersome and involved than the old and eliminates a regime which had received a thorough trial.

Wharton 27 Criticism Business Law II Department for Errors on Question Sheet in Final Examinations

War Mr. Bebe:

Well, Mr. Bebe, the times that try a man's soul are becomingly departed, you might say, and I am hearing after the times of olden days. Nothing is ever as it used to be. There are many classes of cases, which in itself would strengthen the hands of the authorities in the handling of the situation.

Whether the adoption of a stronger government in the positive sense will offset the loss of the preventive influence of the old form of government, only an actual trial will reveal. At any rate, the new system has the virtue of being less cumbersome and involved than the old and eliminates a regime which had received a thorough trial.
