EDUCATORS SENSE NEED FOR VOCATIONAL GUIDANCE OF UNIVERSITY STUDENTS

Vocational guidance for the undergraduate is the real need of a university, according to Kevern Y. Mann, a graduate of the University of Nebraska. He says that universities are harming their students by teaching ideas that are needed and also by not noticing the students but rather helping them learn by examples.

Futurists do not mean this article by students but rather by the fact that students have taken them as yet largely experimentally and in need of a great deal of control. "Hate a man at 8500 a year who has never been to college," imprints Mr. Mann. "Put him at the head of a track which he knows nothing about.

The new system of vocational guidance has been taken up by a number of high schools and colleges. Though the system is not yet in every school, many school administrators believe that it is essential for all the candidates to become acquainted with the regulations on Page Three.

A WORLDWIDE STUDENT ORGANIZATION

The existence in Europe of a student federation with a membership of nearly half a million young men and women, including representatives of twenty-nine countries, is one of the wonders of modern times. The possibilities of such an institution are so Unlimited as the program upon which it operates. The organization seeks not merely to accomplish a few extracurricular purposes but is directed to the broader purpose of promoting student welfare on an international scale and facilitating a better understanding of each other's problems among the students of different lands.

Less than a decade ago, Europe was in a state of upheaval. The whole continent was in the throes of strife and insecurity. Its man power was divided over the issue, and two great allied armies were waging a terrific struggle upon the battlefields of France. Today all has changed. The cloud of war has rolled away, and harmony has been restored once more. What better example of sportmanship could be found than this International Council of students in which the youth of nations recentl) enemies are now united in peace? For the first time in history, the Burschenschaft, a society of German University students, exerted such a strong liberal influence upon the thought of the day that hardly representative measures were adopted by the assemblies to express in every possible way the interest of the different countries and to establish unity in every possible way. Already it has accomplished a great deal along these lines. Aside from this general aim, however, the federation should have the indirect effect of spreading and coordinating ideas of harmonious thought throughout the continent.

The leaders of the present federation will undoubtedly be greater and more for reaching than that of any similar organization, which has preceded it. Primarily, it seems to promise better understanding among the students of the different countries and to inaugurate a more fruitful effort in every possible way. Already it has accomplished a great deal along these lines. Aside from this general aim, however, the federation should have the indirect effect of spreading and coordinating ideas of harmonious thought throughout the continent.

Back in those good old days when the drafting undergrads made their tours around town with their feet on the handle bars, and a race between two wheelers was a gala event—even in those good old days Anheuser-Busch was nationally known among good fellows. And now, with bicycles as rare as fine lunch and pretzels, is the favored drink of college men, because, like the college man, Busch Pale Dry is a good mix everywhere and every time.
