CONVENTIONS MAY DRAW
60,000 TO UNIVERSITY

Advertisers, Educators, Dentists, Chemists and Scientists to Gather Here
During Coming Years

3000 TO ATTEND SUMMER SCHOOL

Although the University with its wide range of interest and adequate housing facilities has always attracted Philadelphians' popularity as a convention city, the additional attraction of the Royal Crescent Exhibition is serving to make this the banner year for conventions to be held at the University, according to a statement made recently by officials in charge of this work. Approximately 3000 visitors are expected to attend the various public affairs to be held here throughout the year.

The series of conventions will open May 10 when the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World will convene at the University. The meetings of the advertising men will continue until June 27, and are expected to attract 12,000 delegates.

From June 27 to July 2, the convention of the National Educational Society will be in session with 10,000 persons in attendance, while from August 12 to August 20, the University will be host to the International Dental Congress with 12,000 delegates. Celebration of the 150th anniversary of the American Chemical Society will bring 10,000 persons to Pennsylvania September 6 to 11, and on November 27 an additional 30,000 will be attracted by the convention of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

In addition to the thousands who will attend these conventions, there will be more than 2000 students on the campus for the regular summer sessions of the University, which will open July 5 and continue August 11.

The Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, the National Educational Association and the International Dental Congress are all placing exhibitions during their conventions here. It is probable that the American Chemical Society Anniversary Meeting will also be festooned with a special exhibition which will include relics of Joseph Priestley, the discoverer of oxygen.

An Important Consideration

In the midst of the bustle and hustle that is so characteristic of the end of the school year, we should pause for a few moments during the course of this week and give a thought to next year's courses. Registration for these courses will take place, in the Wharton School, this week. It is a matter which should not be too hastily considered, because a mistake in this time is likely to spell, in a great extent, the plans of many men for the future.

The first consideration in choosing a set of courses for the fall term should be given to the required subjects. These are far more important, in the long run, than any consideration of electives. Sometimes an oversight in taking required courses means the difference between graduation and failure when the time for commencement arrives.

Elective studies also fill an important niche in the process of choosing a set of courses. These are, as a rule, more difficult to select than are the former type. Consideration must be given to the general nature and interest which the course holds for the individual, as well as to the prerequisites which are necessary for credit.

An elective course is more likely to be disappointing to the student than a required subject, because the required work is fashioned to suit his likes. The titles of these courses are also sometimes misleading. Unless an individual has a very fair knowledge of the subject matter of a prospective course, it is advisable that he confer with the department head in order to realize exactly what phase of the subject the course deals.

The entire matter is of the utmost importance to the student, and, consequently, it should not be decided in a hasty manner. When the time for registration arrives, a careful thought should be given to the subject matter of a prospective course in order to make the selection of courses in the selection of subjects before he makes his final choice.

A Rapid Growth

In line with the general improvements in University organization, there is a noticeable improvement in the facilities which Houston Hall offers to the undergraduate body. In the past, Houston Hall was fashioned as a student center, with not regard for the conveniences which it now affords. It contained the post room, the reading room, barber shop, post office and publication offices, but it was without the well-equipped store which it now boasts.

The last five years have shown a decided change in Houston Hall. The book store has been greatly improved by the addition of a soda fountain and other merchandise departments which it formerly lacked. Besides these features, the recent establishment of a Victor Talking Machine agency in the store will enable the management to supply another of the students' demands. This Victor agency is a notable advancement on the part of the store. It is the only one of its kind on the campus, and one of the computations in the city of Philadelphia.

The Travel Bureau is another notable improvement in the service which Houston Hall provides for the students. Through this medium, announcements can be obtained on any Custom of 1500 years ago dictates that the workers should rise and write letters with wax stamped with last personal seal. A limestone cylinder of royal yellow, sealed witness of the days when CE was the Sumerian fashion center of the world, is in the possession of the University Museum. This impression is the finest document of the oldest seal known, that of Bashi-Ram a monarch who lived in 3000 B.C.

Bashi-Ram was the son of a woman who invented, who claimed to have founded the fourth dynasty. Her son reigned for twenty years over all Kish, and it is believed that his rule actually extended into CE. His royal title is not impressed upon the seal, which reads, "Bashi-Ram, the never-failing husbandman of CE." Consequently, it is believed that he feared to use the title he usurped. "Husbandman" was the title given to the kings of CE. It had a religious and a civil significance, meaning that the king was head of both temporal and spiritual affairs.

Besides the inscription carved upon the seal, there is a scene depicting the approach of a worshipper to a seated god, who is probably the wife of the moon god. The scene is in the best of Sumerian style, and it is believed that it indicates performances in behalf of the moon god. Because the god is enthroned, philologists are led to surmise that the woman is the patroness of a great city of the ancient world.

Among the University collection, there is also the oldest Canaanite royal seal, of about 1530 B.C., inscribed with the name of King Adrambala's son. The date of its discovery is unknown. The cylinder is one of known size and pictures the god Singiram. national protector of the Canaanite people, and dungeon.

VALUE OF EDUCATION IN MOVIES STATED BY HAYS

Industry, Ability and Honesty Only Limitations Upon College Youth in Motion Pictures

STRESSES YOUTH OF INDUSTRY

Industry, ability and honesty of the individual are the only limitations upon the opportunities for college youths in the moving picture industry today, according to Will H. Hays, titular executive of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., the largest and most influential moving picture organization in the country. He does not claim that a college education is in a necessity in the profession, but he does point out the advantages which the training presents to those who have received it. In support of the contentions, he points to the large number of college men who are now holding positions of responsibility in the industry.

There is opportunity in moving pictures not only for the actor, he declares, but also for the writer, the director, the advertiser, the business man, the executive, the technician, the attorney, the accountant, the lawyer, the politician, the publisher, the publicity man. In short, any position which comes under the rubric of human endeavor. Mr. Hays refutes the argument that removing one opportunity only is not as bad as three. He pictures the moving picture industry as growing with each new situation that it meets. He maintains that it is a business that has established itself so sound a social, economic basis that has still a destiny of youth to be accomplished.

The reason for this, he says, is that the industry is but a youth itself. It is a field for pioneers, with ever-increasing advancement. Twenty-nine years, since the moving picture industry came into being, and it has developed so rapidly that it stands now as an affirmed position with the nation. He believes that it is one business that has established itself so sound a social, economic basis that has still a destiny of youth to be accomplished. Mr. Hays stresses the youth of the industry. "In order to continue in the future," he continues. "the industry needs men with traditions, men with consciousness of duties to be performed, and the college man has these.”
