UNIVERSITY DAY

Today, the twenty-second of February, is one of the most distinctive dates in all American university history. It marks the birth of the Father of our Country. Throughout this land, even in the smallest towns and the remotest farm homes, the birthday of George Washington will be observed. And it is not only here that this day will be celebrated. In the United States and in every country in the face of the earth—the Father of American liberty will be hailed and his deeds extolled.

There is more in the name of Washington that commemorates the young man of today, and a grasp of his life can only be obtained by a study of the man—through the instrument of foreign. It is a smiling example of virtue, patience, leading abroad, and a continuation. It was a study of life's occasion, and the fact that it is something to which he might hope carry out with his heart and his head—his duty and his country's. The line of all recognition was met; it was his task as a leader in every country. The perfection of education and the development of this republic—is the desire of his city and on every corner of the country.

It is fitting that this date should be celebrated as University Day at Pennsylvania. Established by Benjamin Franklin in 1740, it is the birthday of the United States, a fact not to be overlooked. Pennsylvania, the land of opportunity, the birthplace of many great men, was not made in vain. In this state, the Father of our Country was born.

It is with a profound respect for the past that the University looks to the future. The world has changed, and so have the needs of the campus. For the past hundred years, and more Pennsylvania has placed in the hands of the Father of the country.
