Climate is needed for the air to be dry and cold, to allow the formation of snow crystals. Without this climate, snow cannot form. The temperature must be below 0°C (32°F) and there must be a sufficient number of water vapor molecules in the air. The air pressure also plays a role, as high pressure typically coincides with cold air and low pressure with warm air. Additionally, the presence of a lifting mechanism, such as mountains or topography, is necessary to bring the air to the necessary altitude for condensation to occur. Without these factors, snow cannot form.

The supporting cast of this star-studded production was in no way overshadowed by the principals. Particularly deserving of mention are the splendid performances of every "well rounded" Penn man who cropped up in the Off-Broadway production. One of our connections with the University. Thus far it has been acceptable. If we continue to respect the University, we will not have the University respect us.
