Falling plaster and cracked walls didn't bother William Malamud in room 125 Baldwin Dorm. Capital-Roommate Richard Berenson tried to clean up the place before the interview. Dr. Arthur Walters, professor of history and dormitory proctor, surveys the damage.

Sixteen students were evacuated from Baldwin Dormitory Sunday night as a precautionary measure after partial collapse and severe cracking of inner partitions had developed—no one was injured. It appears that the damage was caused by a settlement in the foundation of the building resulting from the Woodland-Vanderbilt sinkhole.

The situation was first noticed late Saturday afternoon when the plaster began to fall out of one of the thin inner partitions in Room 136 Baldwin. The campus guards were called in to survey the damage and when they arrived they found a portion of the ceiling had caved in.

William Gehman, the executive engineer and head of buildings and grounds of the University, was notified and briefly surveyed the damage. The dean of men, George Peters, was called in with Dr. Eugene Egan, director of dormitories, and Baldwin Proctor Dr. Arthur Walters. The authorities determined that the situation was not serious and the occupants were allowed to return to their rooms.

The General Safety Measure was ordered by Dr. Haus according to the evacuation (Continued On Page 3)
One more game and it will all be over except for the questioning as far as Pennsylvania football goes. It has indeed been an unusual season. We can remember the way back in September before the opening of school when all the headline read our high hopes for the Red and Blue gridiron. There was also the writer who said, "For all, athletic director Jerry Ford was able to soften the schedule for a touchpaper." And when they were given a chance to give the team a little more confidence and a little more spark.

Then came Bake. After holding on and giving the Blue Devils a good game for the first half the Quakers fell apart and that was it. There is one thing we can only be reminded of the criminal negligence of the sense of educational mission. Pennsylvania's Capt. Jim Nelson casts a pass from quarterback Jim Mahler to score a Quaker TD against Princeton. Captain has been mentioned for all-east hours.

Our vote for one of the finest captains in Quaker football history goes to Jim Nelson. Besides providing fine inspirational leadership Captain has backed this up with outstanding play in the games. It's hard to have a better year than a captain when your team has lost six games in one season play. We want him to win a captain's award and the players should, as the team a little more confidence and a little more spark.

For the situation. It's nice to sit back and yell "let's give it up, but what you may be reminded of the criminal negligence of the sense of educational mission. 13 Gridders Conclude Careers Against Cornell

Seniors Undefeated in Cornell Series

By Bob Paul

Thirteen seniors at Pennsylvania close their football careers against Cornell in the traditional Thanksgiving Day game on Thursday. Eleven of this group, including captain Castle, are from the State of Pennsylvania.

Here, seven of the Pennsylvanians have been counting on the final home game this fall and eight of them were in the starting lineup when the Red and Blue met Army, and this group of thirteen have never known defeat at the hands of a Penn squad.

The thirteen, all except Howard Kopenhefer, were defeated in the 1951 freshman game. Jackson, the only senior from Pennsylvania, has played every position in his college career and now the for- mer placekicker is a fixture at right guard.

The final two seniors closing their careers are Roy Heffel- finger, a halfback from Lansford, and tackle Bill Judge from Boyertown.

WALT HYROSNIKI

Four of the seniors come from the Philadelphia area. In addi- tion to Castle, there are right end Jackson, right guard Manley and tackle Bill Judge from Roy- don High, was sidelined with a knee injury sustained the pre- vious game and played only 80 minutes against Army. He also caught touchdown passes against Princeton and Penn State.

The two men from out of state closing their careers against Cornell are halfbacks Gary Gurskie, a junior from Philadelphia, and Ed Delaney, a backfield man from Shamokin, Pa.

John Gurskie gained a measure of prominence as a sophomore when he replaced captain Bob Kinloch and earned the regular berth for Pennsylvania as a backfield man in the George Washington game and earned the regular berth for Pennsylvania as a backfield man. First Edition of Dr. Rush

The first edition of Dr. Benjamin Rush’s "Syllabus of a Course of Lectures on Chemistry," which appeared in 1770 and has been called the first American chemistry text, has been reprinted in facsimile by the Friends of the University of Pennsylvania Library. Dr. Rush, famous physician and patriot, delivered the lectures at the College of Philadelphia, now the University of Pennsylvania, where in 1760 he had become the first professor of chemistry in the nation’s first medical school.

A search at Williamsburg, Va., and at the University of Virginia, the former Charlotte College, has revealed no other copy of the "Syllabus" in existence. A search has disclosed only one other copy of this edition, owned by the Historical Society of Pennsylvania.

Republished Twice

Dr. Rush republished the "Syllabus" in 1772 and 1782. Only one copy of each of these editions has been located, one at the University of Georgia and one at the University of the American Philosophical Society.

Publication of the facsimile was made possible by the generosity of former Senator George Wharton Pepper, chairman of the Board of Libraries, and the University’s president, Dr. Bull. In the facsimile edition, there have been inserted an introduction and bibliographical note by Robert Butterfield, now the University of Pennsylvania’s president, and a preface by Dr. Butterfield.

"Under ‘Salts,’ for example,” Dr. Rush expounded their uses in various manufacturing processes and in agriculture. "In theory, emphasizing its importance to a people who were settling in seemingly endless western forests and who found in potash one of the few products they could make quickly and sell for cash, Dr. Rush expanded their uses in various manufacturing processes and in agriculture. The "Syllabus" is a bare outline of the lectures. It deals with heat, mixture, metals, waters, vegetables and animal substances. A long appendix titled "Of the Pharmacy of Vegetables and Animals" covers the collection, preservation, separation and composition of organic matter.

Baldwin Dormitory Damage Surveyed

by Julian Wasser

The location of Baldwin Dormitory, in relation to other dorms and the subway construction, is visible in the aerial photograph taken over the southern part of the campus.

Above right, University officials look over the brickwork on Baldwin in order to locate further cracks in the structure. The greatest split in the masonry has been marked with a black line and arrows.
