Health Agency Changes

In March 3, 1954, The Daily Pennsylvanian characterized the student Health Service as one of the University’s ‘growing weaknesses.’ The editorial did not imply that the Service, on the whole, was not functioning adequately, but it did indicate that much room for improvement in the performance of the services it rendered.

A year has passed which has radically changed the student Health Service. The major impetus behind the improvement is the new director, Dr. Paul Schrode, who has worked long and devotedly to make the student Health Service an appealing help to sick students.

He is still hampered from making the Service an ideal one because of restrictions funds, space limitations, and lack of personnel. But the present agency seems to us to be the best possible one under the circumstances that Dr. Schrode has to work with, and we are impressed with his constant goodwill and desire to please the students.

We think that the most important improvement this year has been the transfer of the Service to the University Hospital from its former quarters on the second and third floors of the J. White House Training House. The Service is accessible to more students, especially to dormitory residents. The advantage not possessed by the Training House, which some students could not even locate.

Another improvement has come in the method of handling students. There has been a tremendous increase in visits to the Student Health Service. Literally thousands of people have been treated here since last September, but they have apparently been cared for politely and efficiently, although even with the new appointment system there have been long waits caused by the priority given to emergencies. The emergency ward provides facilities during the night for sick students, and arrangements have been made to insure that serious cases are immediately treated in the hospital.

The division of the Department of Public Relations has been relocated in an office building at the corner of 35th and Walnut Streets, which will be moved in the near future to the Randall-Morgan Annex. Occupied until recently as part of the Physics department, the area on the first floor of the office building was planned when free University-owned space became available with the relinquishment of the Physics department to the new Benjamin Franklin Center, and Mr. George Turner of the office of the Business Vice-President has given assistance in its relocation.

New positions in the department have been filled to aid in the move: Dr. Frederick W. Jaeger, previously assistant professor of Physics, is now head of the department.

"And Then To Malta by Submarine"

I address these words to the young man who stands upon the threshold of his career. To the young man who has perhaps not yet been divorced. To the young man who is not yet thorn-proof.

Young man, you must have a social asset to get by these days. An unshaven, pinched-out chin complete with back-stamp and stubble. You stand before a rack of imported suits with charm accounts between the buttons. If you're really trying, you imagine that you're aboard ship, in the ship's lounge, sipping a double-dry as the captain drones for the last time, "All women, children and men leave the lounge and save your- self."

Wanamaker Executive Discusses New Look

In Men's Fashion For Spring, Summer Wear

By Reunna Wetherell

President of Public Relations, Wanamaker, Philadelphia

One of the most noticeable changes in Men's Fashions during the current season, and one which is most definitely to be seen in the late spring and summer, has to do with the cut of clothing. Gone are the smart college man, who will be wearing suits and sport coats cut to present natural appearance. There is a decided swing-away from the drapes, padding and pleats which have been so prominent recently. The newer cuts still eliminate these additions, even to the point of no pleats in the trousers. The time has come for clothes that fit the form, rather than making a form to fit the clothes, as is the rule of the day.

Subdued patterns are becoming more and more popular, with subdued colors, including charcoal gray, blue, and charcoal blue. Clothes that are soft, quiet, and reserved, with soft hues evident, and in all cases being more and more accurized with associated colors. The brilliant colors can be found in the ties, the shirts, and even the belts and watch bands. These accessories are in shades of gray and harmonize well with the quietness of the rest of the suit. A summer man will see the new khaki suit of cotton gingham. The most popular style will be

Young Men Show Greatest Style Interest Since 1700's

By Richard C. Weismann
Sales Promotion Manager
Gilbels Men's Store

A few years ago, if you tried to interest the average man in fashion, chances are you'd either think you were misinterpreting him for something he definitely wasn't, or you'd be bored. Speak of male fashion to most American men today and you'll find a new interest. Not that he'll always be willing to admit it, but you'll find the occasion for the average man's interest in men's fashion shows itself during leisure time. These days when men really were the wearers of any garment he'd be the U. S. man so concerned with what he is to wear.

The young man's major clothes interest actually is in sportswear—the things he will wear during leisure time. These garments have most to do with better living. Whereas a few years ago, clothes that initiated the wardrobes of most men, today the average man is likely to have more sports garments than dress clothes; more slacks than regular suits, more sport socks than black. What's the reason for the change? These factors are uppermost:

1. Color: Sportswear introduced a new concept of color into clothes. Today, men don't want the same kinds of somber, somber flannel that expressed their restrained appearance. The restraint of forms. Instead colors are varied but still in good taste. Most popular for the coming season are the darker carbon tones inspired by Italy and the Continent. These colors will be seen in slacks, shirts and shorts. Other colors rated most likely to appear during the coming spring and summer are black, charcoal, gray, deep greens and lighter colors, the latter in soft tones. This is especially evident in sportshirts, where restraint has not been marked in recent years. Gilbels Men's Store, for example, is featuring Black Warp Cotton Madras, a shirt with a black background, and slacks in deep grays.

2. Correlated and Coordinated Items: More and more men pick shoes, jackets that go well with shirts, socks that reflect the tone of shoes and of slacks. In Gilbels Men's Store we are featuring these combinations: a man can buy a pair of Bermuda shorts, a smart, contrasting shirt, sports jacket and jacket, and a belt that matches. If these articles coordinate or contrast well, he can make numerous combinations, giving the effect of a totally new ensemble each time.

3. New Washability: Today, practically all items can be thrown into the washing machine and come out sparkling clean right at home. Shrink resistance, the ability of holding shape, and color-fastness are important features. Today's fabrics, man-made and natural, take dyes so well that new color effects can be achieved; furthermore, they hold their colors fast so that there is no risk of colors fading or running if properly cared for.

5. Design: There are many innovations in men's wear. The continental influence has been increasingly apparent in shirts, jackets that go well with two or three of their specific outfits; socks that reflect the
