Many people have conceptions which, upon spending a few years in college, are quickly discarded. The conception of a cheerleader as a malevolent person is one of them, far from the truth. These tireless extroverts, whose seemingly unlimited supplies of energy have caused many to wonder, are, in this case, honest and deserved respect by their classmates—respect because they are so cheerfully. Why?

The aim of this organization of this kind can be measured by two standards. The first—How close does it succeed in attaining its end?—and, second—the culture of its times.

The aim of the cheerleaders should be to promote spirit among the student body and to show the world that they represent all that is good about the University. Whether this is accomplished would require a better job in time-consuming investigations, but if anyone has ever undertaken such a study, it must be omitted as a standard of measurement.

Therefore, the only means of judgment is the members:

Small numbers breed exclusiveness which (and no value judgment should be inferred) is the desire of both. Such is the case with the student union, the open University, the spirit Univer-

by Dan Dawley

From there, the game was played out with the Quakers making a bid to score, but Dealey struck out Bob Proctor and Jim Castle in two straight attempts.
