Sturges Leads Penn to 79-72 Victory Over State

by Dan Dawley

Breaking out of his long home-court slump with a vengeance, Pennsylvania's varsity sagers rambled to an easy 19-point triumph over Penn State Saturday night at the Palestra.

Whereas in previous contests the Quakers were seldom up to par, nothing seemed to go wrong for the Pennsylvania varsity teams as they won their sixth game in 11 outings.

Sturges, who had been out of the picture in recent games because of illness, returned to the starting five to fill the void left by the absence of senior athlete.

Sturges scored 10 points to the cause and was the key man off the boards after Sturges was removed, co-captain Fraim also had 10.

As a whole the Penn forces were likewise uneventful, with only Wally Hoffman breaking the fast break was working well—

Penn dominated the game from the opening tip-off, their accuracy slacking off some-

The winning team, which had been consistently strong in its all-around play, showed how the Yugoslavian educational system is designed to completely indoctrinate all young people in the Communist ideology. Choice of educational privileges is almost non-existent.

After describing the horrors of the secret police, he revealed his own feelings of complete helplessness following his escape. "I felt," he said, "that someone was still watching me and that I was Joe Sturges who ignited the first half's scoring. The all-time scoring leader of the Quakers, 11' 5, during this year.

Penn slogans Dick Consuelle drives around Body Marta for a two-point score in the second half of Saturday's Quaker-Penn State contest. Consuelle scored 18 and pulled off 15 rebounds for the Red and Blue off the boards.

Sturges was not only outstanding in the game to state, but played a fine defensive game, as well. He threw in 37 points for his most productive outing this season, and sank better than 56 per cent from the field. The first half alone he sank six of eight shots from the floor and converted a like percentage of tries from the charity stripe for 8 points.

The Frontal Organization: The best aspect of the American war effort was the Allied powers' commitment to a coordinated, integrated Allied strategy. The US, UK, and Soviet Union were the main players, and their cooperation was crucial. The Allies' success was largely due to their ability to work together and coordinate their efforts. The Axis powers, on the other hand, were divided and struggled to coordinate their efforts. This made them vulnerable to the Allies' strategic attacks.

Four Events Give Eli Edge Against Penn Ciddernows

by Hugh Jacobout

NEW HAVEN, CONN., Feb. 13—Piling up a 35-point edge in just the first half of the game, Yale's track team beat Penn and Brown, in that order, by a score of 77-45-15 in the Ivy's closest meet with the two schools in four years.

Yale outdistanced the Quakers by a near sweep of the shot put, hurdles, high jump, and 440 yard run, and by coping six other first places. Penn won the 60 yard dash, the mile, and the pole vault besides gaining seven second place slots.

Despite the setback, the meet, first of the season for all three teams, featured Penn's best team performance in five years. This feat was accomplished despite the handicap of this year's unusually poor weather conditions for track.

Twelve Times

The lead changed hands no less than twelve times in the first half, as Paul Kelso and Alan Schwait combined for 11 points to help Penn to a 30-30 halftime lead.

Schwait topped the Red and Blue with seven and a half points. Kelso, who connected on four of five free throws, was leading scorer with 16 counters, and Joe Bowman followed with 14.

Fresh Rifle Team

The second annual meeting of the freshman rifle team tomorrow will likely be more competitive than last year's, when every member present was a future graduate.
