A GIVE THE UNMONETED

R. L. Sipperson was a keen, ambitious lad, and when he finished high school he mightily wished to go on with his education. He had, however, many pressing concerns. The debts that his father had piled up during his lifetime were already sufficient to bankrupt any young man. The immediate necessities of life were such that R. L. Sipperson was forced to search for work. He was a diligent worker, and his abilities were such that he found a good job at a local office, where he was employed as a typist.

He worked hard and saved every cent he could. With the meager earnings of his job, he managed to pay off his debts and to accumulate a small savings, which he hoped to use for his education. He was determined to go to college, but he knew that his family could not afford to send him. He decided to take matters into his own hands.

He applied to several universities and was accepted by a few of them. However, the cost of education was still prohibitive. He had to come up with a plan to finance his education. He thought about taking out a loan, but he was hesitant about it, as he knew that he would have to pay back the money with interest. He decided to save instead, and he continued to work hard at his job.

He saved every cent he could, and after a few years, he had enough money to pay for his tuition. He was finally able to attend college, and he studied hard, hoping to get a good degree.

He graduated with honors, and he got a job as a teacher. Despite the low pay, he was grateful for it, as it allowed him to support himself and continue his education.

He eventually earned a teaching fellowship, which allowed him to get a master's degree. He continued to teach, and he was eventually able to get a professorship.

He worked hard all his life, and his efforts paid off. He was able to achieve a good life for himself and his family. He was a shining example of what hard work and determination can accomplish.

All-American kicks and crashing tackles put a brutal squeeze on the rubber in a football. But footballs with bladders of Butyl rubber take punishment in stride... hold air indefinitely... resist weather extremes. Developed from oil by Esso Research, Butyl rubber is out-performing natural and other types of rubber in hundreds of ways.

Proof, once again, that Esso Research works wonders with oil!

Robert J. Buch, M.S. Chem., came to the Engineering Development Section of Du Pont's Geisel Research Division from the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, this past May. Since then, he has engaged in many kinds of chemical engineering work, from pilot-plant to evaluation of the potential of proposed research programs. Within the last year, Bob has taken the responsibility of project R.E. and Ph.D. student grades in all phases of chemical and chemical engineering for the Geisel Research Division.

How would a graduate degree affect my chances for advancement at Du Pont?
