Thoughts While Waiting

PHILLY

by Gaston J. Fonzi

Due to his revered term of office at The Daily Pennsylvanian, Gail Fonzi is no longer with us. And it is with such regret that we retire his "Philly" column. He was last seen hanging about the window of a westbound train, looking for signs and car lightings along Broad Street. You don't have time. The midnight special to New York leaves any minute.

You're gonna miss the old town.

You just don't know what it is, but there's a certain feeling inside of you, a certain emptiness. It's hard to explain. If you go to the center and the west, you find that you and your shoulds are for some odd reason all of a sudden you feel isolated and you don't want it when an old man in a tattered coat, blue and black night cloth up and sits down next to you.

"Great view, son?" the old man says as if he were talking to himself but you're the only one there.

"Yess.

"Why the Jan?"'"well ... it's not exactly ... not from the tops ... but you might say I'm getting away from it.

The old man shook his head balancing his universal knowledge of it. I hate New York, you see. Women just ain't no good.

"Why, I wonder nothing in this big city."

"We're leaving it soon, you know. How's the stay you've got. See you in the day.

The old man with the greatest of all the old men. Louis Armstrong. And the man who writes, "You can't have the best of both worlds, Nellie Alto..."

"The farmer's daughter's waiting for the salesman to take her late town, and the city's waiting for them to make his money down..."

The old man's been to Tol. H. the honest. Hunter, and social at (Front Ave.) Albertos and the neighborhood.

"You know, son, everything's a beautiful thing. Nothing can ever be a bad thing. I mean, you can't change it."

"That's why the bad thing."

"Yes, why the bad thing."
