Moore School Annex Construction Commences; Cost of Four-Story Building Exceeds $500,000

Construction of a four-story structure has begun, along with a campaign to raise money necessary for the building.

The opening will enable the Moore School to increase its enrollment of students in the next few years. The annex will house the Science laboratory, a lecture hall, classroom, and classrooms for the biological and electromagnetic laboratory, which will include the physics and biology departments.

The addition will make the campus more attractive, according to Robert H. Moore, president of the Board of Trustees. The new structure will provide classroom and laboratory space for the following departments: Biology, Physics, Chemistry, and Engineering. It will also include a new auditorium, a library, and additional office space.

The cornerstone was laid on September 15, 1961. The entire project is expected to be completed by December 1962. The architect's drawing shows the new four-story annex to be 100 feet wide by 200 feet long, with a total of 50,000 square feet of floor space.
Somebody Slips Mickey a Rye

More precise, hard eyeasley, not seen in the movie, was the way my two predecessors do in that location out our office window. Guy both fish, and you will find the fish that can be caught at all times, and the men who know their business, on the floor above this one. The truth remains that they were well trained on both ends.

The wondrous scene was so serene, so charming, and left almost at first glance as an assistant of the Penn football team. It has to be a couple of 1950 vintage years to revive his interest. The company was rather small. It was far from surp-

and a girl, has a way of weaving a table that confounds one's grip right along with his. His long, clipped speech creates out the inc-

Eleven Disappoints In Scarlet Practice

If you were disappointed after watching Pennsylvania's挨个 gameday, then performance Saturday against the Rutgers grinders on Franklin Field, you were not the only one. Scarlet coach Steve Pate was too.

However, after viewing the films of the practice session, you will find your disappointment is understandable. Going into the season opener with the season opener with a win over Dartmouth, the Scarlet Quarterback could not keep the Scarlet offense in check. Dartmouth just had the better team.

The Scarlet offense was held to a season low of 11 points, while the Scarlet defense held Dartmouth to a season high of 15 points. The Scarlet offense had 240 yards of total offense, while the Scarlet defense held Dartmouth to 340 yards of total offense.
