Influenza-Type Disease Hits 500; Student Health Facilities Overtaxed

Number of Asiatic Flu Cases Unknown; Injections Against Virus Exceed 5,000

Over 500 cases of "influenza-like disease," including Asiatic Flu, have been reported to the Student Health Service during the past two weeks. Dr. Paul E. Schrode, director of the Student Health Service, said.

Due to the deluge of students reporting Asiatic Flu symptoms, the Student Health Service facilities have been greatly overtaxed, and are not able to accommodate a greater number of cases than they are handling now. This situation has resulted in a large number of students, who would ordinarily lie ill at the Hospital, being sent home to recover, Dr. Schrode added.

One of the seven doctors on duty in the student infirmary had reported he had handled more than 100 cases in the last two weeks. The exact number of Asiatic Flu cases at the University cannot be determined, Dr. Schrode said, because of the exhaustive laboratory tests involved.

He added that there was only one laboratory in Philadelphia equipped to handle the sampling of Asiatic Flu cases. He also said that since the treatment of Asiatic Flu is not known in the United States, the Asiatic Flu symptoms are not known when they are not being made.

Symptoms Described

Scheider described the symptoms of Asiatic Flu as a high fever, more trouble, pain behind the eyes and other aches and pains throughout the body. The acute phase of the symptoms lasted for five or six days.

When the symptoms appear, the person should go to bed immediately, according to Dr. Scheider. These symptoms, which he called the "cough phase," also are not known in the United States. He recommended the person not be treated.

"If the patient should show more serious symptoms," the doctor said, "the real trouble will be discovered as soon as it occurs. In the case of the patient with the less severe symptoms, such as pneumonia that might set in. Up to this time, only a few students have contracted pneumonia, none of them seriously."

5,490 Injections Given

As of October 1, an approximate 5,490 Asiatic Flu vaccine injections have been administered by the Student Health Service to men and employees of the University. As of October 1, an approximate 5,490 Asiatic Flu vaccine injections have been administered by the Student Health Service to men and employees of the University.

Dr. Schroeder urged that all students who have not yet been vaccinated should report to any of the University's Health Service stations as soon as possible. The Student Health Service stations are located in the University Union, the Business Administration Building, the Union Building, the Franklin Science Building, and the 415 Woodland Avenue Laboratory.

There has been a long-standing tradition of the flapper girl being the epitome of modernity, although she was indeed a reaction against the constraints of the society in which she lived. While she was free-spirited and comfortable in her own skin, she was also someone who lived on the fringes of society. This is a theme that is explored in "Joker's Wild," a movie that captures the essence of the flapper era.

The movie was directed by Warren Link and was released in 1927. It tells the story of a young woman named Sue who is sent to a finishing school in order to learn how to behave like the proper members of society. However, Sue is anything but proper, and she quickly finds herself drawn to the freedom and excitement of the city.

The cast of "Joker's Wild" includes a number of actors who were known for their performances in films during the silent era. The movie features Flapper Mary who is known for her lively and carefree nature, while Sue is played by a young woman who is known for her ability to captivate audiences with her charm and wit.

"Joker's Wild" is a movie that celebrates the spirit of the flapper era, and it is a timeless classic that continues to be watched by audiences today. If you are a fan of silent films, you will definitely want to check out this movie and see how it captures the essence of the flapper era.

Bateman Praises Penn; Brown Offense Strong

Sports Set in Junior Varsity Booters

John Bateman, junior varsity basketball coach, praised the Quakers during practice this week.

I think a 5-2 record is what we expected of the team. I am sure the Coach will be pleased with the game. I am especially pleased with the game and feel that we will continue to do well.

Pennsylvania will soon play six football games at home and away on opponents' fields in 1964, with the outside game away from the confines of Franklin Field, scheduled for November 14, at Dartmouth. The Quakers will enter the slate of six next year. The Red and Blue will travel to Honolulu for the first time in the ten-year past next season.

The complete 1964 schedule will officially be released in November by the athletic department.

Kesack Named by ECAC

Pennsylvania State University's Bill Kesack, named Student of the Week by the Daily Pennsylvania Bulletin, received another award this week as the Eastern Coliseum Athletic Committee named him to honorable mention on the ECAC All-East Team for the past week.

Pennsylvania's Jim Metzler was named at fullback on the All-East First Team.

Frosh Booters Travel to Hill

Backed by the vigorous health of Charlie Kael, Frosh Booters, yesterday sent two of its members to Pittsburgh this afternoon to tackle the Hill. The game will be held at 3:30 p.m. today.

Kael, a halfback who led the team in scoring in their previous game, has been hampered by an injured knee. Despite the hampered karate chops, Kael scored almost every time he made a tackle.

The Frosh Booters are currently in second place in the Ivy League Grid Standings with 20 points, behind only the Hillcats with 21 points.
