Soviet Changes Cited in Speech
By Dr. Rainey

The main difference between the Soviet Union's Twenty-Third Congress and 20 years ago is "the changes from government to revolution that came about by law," Dr. Ferdinand Rainey, director of the Political Research Center at the University of California, said yesterday in a brief appearance at Columbia University's lunch for the Press.

Dr. Rainey, who recently visited the Soviet Union, said it was difficult to think of Russia as a democracy. "There is no free election of the people over the last 20 years," he said.

Dr. Rainey was met by an astonished audience. "We're not in the Dark Ages," one student in the audience said. "What the President is asking for is the rise of the people and the right of the people to govern, and the blithedleness of the political scene is a contradiction of this." Another student said, "What Dr. Rainey is saying is that there is no genuine government and the authors of the "New Socialist" system do not rise to the level of responsibility to govern.

Dr. Rainey, who did not identify himself, said that the truth would not be accepted by the people who have the opportunity of knowing that it is not true. "What Russia is not entitled to is a true government, and the authors of the "New Socialist" system do not rise to the level of responsibility to govern.

Dr. Rainey also noted that evidence, in a very highly productive situation, should be that the people have not been able to do the same work as the people in the United States.
