Once Over Heavily

Films and Failures

It seems correct that the chain is no stronger than its weakest link. Undergraduate Council's weakest link has been a compromising factor. The decision of this, the highest and supposedly most powerful student organization, is the Village Club more obviously the Council's weakest link. In fact, this is the reason that Undergrad has instituted procedures to remove the Village Club from membership in the Council. In reality, the proceedings are only intended to be the means toward the end of reviving the Village Club and having it once again become an important campus organization.
There is not one member of this Council who really wants to see the Club removed from the Council, but by the same token, there is not one member who will vote for its retention if drastic measures are not taken against the Club. When it is realized that there are five members of the Village Club on the Council, in addition to the president of the Club, it is realized that the Council means business and is sincere in its desire to see the Village Club fulfill its rightful functions on the campus.

On the surface of things, it appears as if the actions are directed against one man, that man being the president, Richard Ross. In reality, this is not true. The Village Club is the member of the Club that has taken an active part in furthering the aims of Undergrad and in contributing something in the way of organization and leadership. It is this organization's responsibility also to select a man who is willing to do the job.

This is perhaps the reason that the conclusion of the Village Club has shirked its responsibilities and sided in favor of the Village Club, to the

The Village Club has more to do with up-to-date solutions to its problems and prove to Undergrad that its organization means business, than its members are consistently neglected, by the undergraduate athletic interests on campus.

The Club needs a further member and it is hoped that the election of a new member will prove to be an advantage, but an insufficient one, as we now, necesarily, look to the up and coming of the next Undergraduate Council.
