HebblersTell Evils of Retirement

In this way, the future generations would be protected from assuming the financial support of their relatives.

Hebblers denied the fact that all financial support of relatives was necessary. "One of the most important jobs of any family is to protect children against the risk of financial support of their relatives," he said. "If we continue to need for life insurance companies to continue to do business, we will be paralleled to social security, meaning that the state is responsible for the insurance.

The "future of life insurance lies in the hands of the future generations, not in the hands of the past generation," he said. "It is the duty of the future generations to look after themselves, not to look after the past generation."
By now, all the threats of war and critical shortages caused by your action have disappeared. I am sure that you are all aware of the fact that these action have been brought about by the actions of the United States and its allies in the Middle East. They have accomplished a great deal in the way of presenting a united front against aggression. However, I would like to point out that our position is that these action have been brought about by the actions of the United States and its allies in the Middle East. They have accomplished a great deal in the way of presenting a united front against aggression. They are not isolated events, but part of a larger picture that is unfolding. Moreover, it is clear that the United States and its allies have a strong interest in maintaining peace and stability in the region. This interest is shared by many nations around the world, including European countries and Japan. Therefore, it is important that we work together to ensure that these action are not a prelude to further conflict.

The relationship between the United States and its allies in the Middle East is complex and multifaceted. It is based on a combination of economic, political, and military factors. It is important to recognize that this relationship is not static, but rather evolves over time in response to changing circumstances. It is also important to note that this relationship is not just about the United States and its allies. It is also about the needs and interests of the Middle Eastern nations themselves. They have a stake in the outcome of these events, and their voices must be heard.

In conclusion, I believe that the United States and its allies must continue to work together to address the challenges facing the Middle East. This requires a commitment to dialogue, cooperation, and mutual understanding. It also requires a recognition of the importance of the Middle Eastern nations themselves. Only by working together can we ensure that peace and stability are maintained in the region for the benefit of all.

The Rising Tide

by Robert L. Frost

The tide of war has been rising. With a storm over the earth, the "Expeditionary Force" is being ramped up. Its destination: Iran and Syria. Middle East, Iraq, and the West are being directed by Secretary of State John Foster Dulles, and the foreign policies of Dulles and the Eisenhower administration. All nations feel differently. Dr. Robert Strauss-Hoepe, professor of political science at the University of Pennsylvania, is urging a more realistic approach to the Middle East problem. He is advocating the idea of a "talks" conference involving the United Nations, the United States, and Britain. Strauss-Hoepe believes that such a conference is necessary to address the complex issues facing the region. Strauss-Hoepe is not alone in his belief. The United Nations, for example, has already called for a "talks" conference to address the crisis in the Middle East.

The Middle East problem is one of the most complex and difficult challenges facing the international community. It involves a wide range of issues, including the presence of foreign military forces, the status of Israel and the Palestinians, and the role of the United Nations. It is also important to note that the Middle East is a region with a rich cultural heritage and a diverse population. Therefore, any solution to the crisis must be sensitive to the needs and concerns of all the parties involved.

In conclusion, I believe that it is essential that we work together to address the crisis in the Middle East. This requires a commitment to dialogue, cooperation, and mutual understanding. It also requires a recognition of the importance of the Middle Eastern nations themselves. Only by working together can we ensure that peace and stability are maintained in the region for the benefit of all.

Five Hours of Tedium

In the esoteric milieu of events always underway at mid-semester, Penn has an almost unique tradition of providing events that are ghastly in equal parts of their duration and appeal. Where a year ago the innumerable activities of Penn's visiting student body found expression in its Special Projects, this year's remarkable projects have been turned into a series of mandatory events. A brief bulletin by the University's Student Activities Office explains the rationale behind the new arrangement: "In order to provide a more complete and realistic picture of what a student does at Penn, it is essential that he be exposed to a wide variety of activities. By requiring attendance at all events, it is possible to ensure that this exposure is provided in an organized and systematic way." The bulletin also notes that the faculty will be given the opportunity to assess the effectiveness of the new arrangements and will be encouraged to make suggestions for improvements. The bulletin concludes with an appeal to the students to "take advantage of the many opportunities that are available to you." Despite these efforts, it is clear that the new arrangement will not please everyone. Some students have already expressed concern that the requirement will lead to a decrease in the quality of the events, while others have suggested that the requirement is too restrictive and should be modified. Nonetheless, it seems likely that the new arrangement will continue to operate for at least the foreseeable future. In any case, there is no denying that it is a unique and fascinating experiment in educational policy. It is to be hoped that it will lead to a better understanding of the various needs and desires of the students, and that it will ultimately result in a more effective and satisfying educational experience.

A SCHOOL AWAY FROM SCHOOL

Students majoring in science, like all other American students, still have a problem finding for fun. Then, when a student is after a degree in engineering or math or like that, he simply has not the time to take in the liberal arts courses to amuse his heart and soul.

And what is being done about this unhappy situation? I'll tell you what. Enlightened corporations everywhere are setting up co-educational liberal arts programs for the newly employed science grad—in short, designed to broaden his cultural base—for the enlightened corporation expects that the truly cultured employee is the truly valuable employee.

Take, for example, Lambawool Sigfusse. A week after his graduation, Lambawool reported to Mr. Femur, the personnel director of an enlightened corporation engaged in the manufacture of easter plims and wing nuts. "How do you do?" said Lambawool. "I'm Lambawool Sigfusse and I've come to work."

"Sit down," said Femur, chuckling kindly. "Have a Marlboro."

"Thank you," said Lambawool. "I like Marlboros, I like their flavor and their flake."

"Me too," said Mr. Femur, blinking knowingly. "And I like their flip-top box. When my flip-top box of Marlboros is empty, I see it is time to keep fresh boxes in."

"Know what I do when my flip-top box of Marlboros is empty?" asked Lambawool. "What?" said Mr. Femur, smirking grinningly. "I throw away some Marlboros," said Lambawool. "A sound idea," said Mr. Femur, wrinkling foolishly. "But enough chitchat, come along to the campus."

"Campus?" said Lambawool, printed. "But I've come to work. Take me to my drawing board."

"This is an enlightened corporation," said Mr. Femur, drumming stridently. "First you must get your cultural base broadened."

Mr. Femur took Lambawool to the training campus, which looked like any other campus. It had over-covered buildings, dormitories and an academic building, a student center, a cow, and a meadow. Lambawool was given a roommate, a basin, and copies of the company bylaw and order, and the enlightened corporation proceeded to fill the gap in his culture.

Career Opportunities For Engineers

You are cordially invited to meet Mr. K. L. JACKSON, our representative at the University Placement Service

LOGAN HALL

Fri., Feb. 14, 1958-9:00 a.m.
Yea, that's right. Thanks to this amazing A-C Network Calculator, Pennsylvania Electric Association Engineers can actually plan power networks, complete with generating stations, power lines, homes, and factories, for future development and know in advance what problems will be created and how to solve them.

And, this almost "human" electronic marvel is only one of a number of modern electronic devices that frequent the every day life of engineers engaged in today's fascinating electric power industry.

As an engineer about to begin your career, you simply won't find a better field than the electric power industry... particularly with a Pennsylvania electric company. Nowhere else will you find newer advances in equipment or methods—nowhere else will you find a greater opportunity to help build America's future—and nowhere else will you find a wider range of interests, one of which is sure to be the one you're looking for.

If you feel you can qualify to join an organization that's rapidly expanding; that offers you young man opportunities for advancement; that is extremely well known and respected, then talk to your placement counselor. Or, write to Pennsylvania Electric Association, State Street Building, Harrisburg, Pa., telling them where you would like to live and work.
TAXI DRIVING, at best, is a checkered career. Some days, nothing seems to click—including the meter! Traffic crawls, motor stalls, horns blare, bumpties meet. What a moment to reach for a Lucky—and discover (horror!) you’re fresh out. That’s when the most genial driver turns into a Crabby Cubby. And why not? He’s missing the best taste going...a cigarette that’s light as they come. Luckies are all light tobacco—good-tasting tobacco, toasted to taste even better. Try ’em yourself. And step on it!
