Stassen Calls Students Future Hope Of Troubled World at DP Lecture

"Safeguarded, Competitive Coexistence" Urged by GOP Gubernatorial Aspirant

It will be the university students who will bend the way toward finding a means of solving the present international dilemma, Harold E. Stassen, candidate for the Republican gubernatorial nomination for Governor of Michigan this year.

Speaking at the fourth Daily Pennsylvania forum, in Irvine Auditorium, Stassen called for a period of "safeguarded, competitive, coexistence." This is the only choice, he said; for to do otherwise would be armistice.

He went on to ask for a meeting at the highest level as the method of achieving a workable plan for disarmament, but indicated that the longer goal of permanent world peace would be achieved through the efforts of university students.

The work of college students today will be more important in 10 or 15 years than at the present time, he declared. Particularly, he emphasized the students' vital role in shaping public opinion and in learning about the causes of international conflicts.

State governors and second in command, of the United States, he added, were the Evelyn B. Haysmen, but that the colleges, because of their "inexhaustible" personnel, had added a new dimension to international politics.

Stassen, speaking in the Pennsylvania's largest student forum, called on the high school students of the state to take an active interest in the primary election for Governor, "for a vote in the primary is worth more votes than a vote in the general.

"The votes of the high school students are important in the primary because the candidates for Governor have to be approved by the people of the state, as Stassen told the audience.

"In the aggregate, the students are going to vote the highest numbers, the most votes will be registered by the students, "Stassen said.

"How we vote in the primary is going to determine the points of view of the candidates for Governor, " he added.

"The high school students are going to be the leaders in the country, "Stassen said, "and if we get off on the wrong foot, it is going to take a long time to get back in line again."

Second Parking Raid Yields Seven Students

Seven University students were arrested yesterday at the Pennsylvania's Piazza for parading together in the street in violation of the law.

"The students were acting as a group, " said Dr. Ewins, who observed that they had not been arrested before for this offense.

The students were stopped by police at 11th and Locust Sts on S. 100th St.

Second U.S. Satellite Lost After Jupiter-C Launching

The United States government yesterday announced that the second U.S. satellite was lost after it crashed into the earth after a short flight over the Atlantic Ocean.

The satellite, which was launched from Cape Canaveral, Fla., yesterday, is the second of a series of experimental satellites which are to be launched from the United States to study the effects of the earth's atmosphere on artificial satellites.

"The satellite was lost because of a failure of the rocket motor, " said Dr. E. W. Jackson, director of the United States Space Research Laboratory.

"The failure of the rocket motor caused the satellite to fall into the earth, " Jackson said.

"The satellite was launched yesterday from Cape Canaveral, Fla., and was recovered by the United States Navy."
Letters to the Editor

Editor, Daily Pennsylvanian:

Last Friday, your publication printed an offensive comment written by "William." With much thought and consideration, I have decided to speak out about this comment. The celebration of the University's diversity and inclusion is a fundamental aspect of our community. All individuals, regardless of their background, should feel welcomed and respected. Any comment that diminishes or discriminates against any group is unacceptable.

Although I may not agree with "William," I would not want the same experience to be extended to him. The University is truly a community where everyone has the freedom to express their thoughts. However, it is important to note that such freedom should not be used to harm or disrespect others.

I hope that in the future, we can all work together to create a more inclusive and respectful environment. Let us continue to promote diversity and acceptance, so that everyone can feel valued and appreciated.

Sincerely,

[Your Name]

Igor Markovitch
Masterful Musician

by Stephen B. Decker

Last weekend, a brilliant young conductor, previously vacationing Eugene Costanzo, took the baton of the Penn Symphony Orchestra.

Igor Markovitch was born in Kiev, July 24, 1972. Just before the First World War, his family moved to Switzerland. It was there that he began to study at a very young age under Paul Costanzo. When he was 16 years old, he went to Paris to continue his studies under his father, Alexandre. At the age of 19, he became associate conductor with Eugene Costanzo, who had special interest in Markovitch's compositions. "The Elasticity," "The New Harmony," "The Revolution," and "The Fantasy," one of his most famous works, "Piano in Paris," is set to Canto Moreau's "Nacht Mein Bewein." "Piano in Paris," under Costanzo's direction, is a masterpiece for orchestra and opera, and one such opera, "The Three-Cornered Hat," is the best known of all of his works.

Markovitch touring concert from Rome to Venice, was the highlight of the season for the orchestra. Last year, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, he conducted the premiere of a Rachmaninoff work for string orchestra, which was much acclaimed. Masterful conductor Markovitch was also master instructor at the renowned Moscow Conservatory of Music.

Last spring, Markovitch became the first non-Russo director of the famous Leningrad Orchestra of Pops. His recording career is also successful for a young conductor. In a sense of a cooperative atmosphere in the public service, he conducted the Academy of Performing Arts and the Russian National Orchestra. With his imaginative and dynamic interpretations, last year, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, he conducted the premiere of a Rachmaninoff work for string orchestra, which was much acclaimed. Masterful conductor Markovitch was also master instructor at the renowned Moscow Conservatory of Music.

The sensitivity hands guided perfectly his music making. The audience was captivated by his technical virtuosity. His conducting style is characterized by an intricate balance of dynamic and tonal control, coupled with a vivid, expressive interpretation. The audience was swept away by the music, and the conductor's artistry was displayed in its purest form. The orchestra's performance was a model of precision and finesse, with each section of the ensemble contributing to the overall beauty of the sound. The emotional depth and technical excellence of the performance left the audience in awe.

In the end, the concert was a testament to the power of music and the dedication of the musicians involved. The conductor's leadership and the orchestra's skillful execution came together to create a moving and unforgettable experience. The audience was left with a lasting appreciation for the beauty and artistry of music, and the participants in the performance were reminded of the profound impact that music can have on the human spirit.

Quaker Six Loses
To Tiger Cubs, 6-2

(Shatkin, N. J. March 5) Penn's hockey team, 3-2-1, completely outplayed Princeton in a 6-2 loss to the Tigers on Monday night at the two-rink complex. With the Princeton offense on fire and ending the game with a 9-3 record, the Quakers as expected were outclassed.

Three goals were scored in the first period. The Quakers started the scoring with a short-handed goal on a shot by Mike Eagleson.
Shatkin, who has scored 14 goals in as many games, set up the goal. Mike Eagleson, who scored 14 and 13 goals respectively, tied two second-period goals for the Tigers.

Jonasson and Beer Compete In Nationals

And Jonasson and Beer, the two freshmen of Penn's boxing team that will compete in the main event of the National Intercollegiate Spanish Fencing Association, which starts Saturday at Yale's Payne Whitney Gymnasium. Both Jonasson and Beer are recent championship winners. Jonasson won the Open E Fivonsque fencers' championship, and Beer won the Eastern Class B championship. The drawing for the tournament will be held this evening, and they will start with the first round at 9:30 tomorrow morning. The second round will also be held tomorrow.

The third and fourth rounds are scheduled for Saturday, and the final stage and finals will be held on Sunday.

Competitors will represent Army, Arizona, Dartmouth, Navy, Yale, Harvard, Princeton, William and Mary, and Pitt College. The Spanish championship was won last year by Ben Barkoff, who defeated John Griffin of Navy. Navy holds the National Three-Man Team Trophy awarded in 1957 for the best team of three fencers. It occupied the top position in last year's tournament team ranking.
