For Unlimited Cuts

The University administration would probably not condone that an institution of higher learning retains its inherent vitality by changing as conditions and demands change. Therefore, we would like to offer a system of unlimited "cuts." The word "unlimited" would bear qualification, since too loose a regulation would no doubt be abused by those who could least afford to do so. Freedom would come under the present method and upholders of "cuts" would have to maintain a "B" average to enjoy full privileges.

Thus only those qualified because of ability and effort would be able to enjoy these privileges.

There are particular virtues in such a plan. It encourages an attitude of intellectual independence among those who would profit from it. It also throws the responsibility for effective teaching on the part of the professors who would have to offer sufficient incentives to the more mature, superior students. The result would be a higher level of instruction and consequently, an increased interest and appreciation by the student. If the student might be able to derive maximum benefit from the freedoms of the plan, the examinations and doing the required reading, it would be up to the instructor to press otherwise.

Propriety applied, this is a mutual self-improvement plan for students and faculty.

What's Good for Harvard . . .

Another ‘Confidential Guide’

By Arthur E. Lichtenford

Up at Harvard, one may find an interesting "Confidential Guide" in the pages of the Student. The “Confidential Guide” is a new feature and very timely. In fact, the recent activating of the "Confidential Guide" has given birth to an avalanche of letters and questions concerning the ability and necessity of the student to know his lines in the game of "cutting." The "Confidential Guide" is a very helpful and concise way of getting the "cut" out of the game. The "Confidential Guide" is an excellent source of help for those who are interested in getting a "cut."

Vol. LXXI

To Whom it May Concern:

April 14th, 1958

Resident Freshman:

Dear Sir:

I am writing in response to the article entitled "What's Good for Harvard . . ." by Arthur E. Lichtenford which appeared in the January 25th issue of the Student. In this article, Mr. Lichtenford offers a "Confidential Guide" for students to use in determining their lines in the game of "cutting."

I would like to express my disagreement with Mr. Lichtenford's approach to this matter. While I do not necessarily disagree with the general concept of "cutting," I believe that the implementation of such a system would have negative consequences for the University and its students.

Firstly, the article suggests that students should be able to "cut" as much as they desire, regardless of their academic performance or contributions to the University community. This would encourage a culture of dishonesty and self-interest, which is contrary to the values that the University seeks to uphold.

Additionally, the article's focus on "cuts" as a form of recognition for academic achievement is problematic. While it is true that some students may use "cuts" as a way to gain recognition for their work, this should not be the primary motivation for pursuing academic excellence.

Finally, the article's implication that "cutting" is a necessary evil in the University setting is incorrect. There are many alternative methods for recognizing academic achievement, such as honors, awards, and scholarships, which do not involve dishonesty or self-interest.

I urge the University administration to consider the negative consequences of implementing a "cutting" system and to explore more constructive ways of recognizing academic achievement.

Sincerely,

Penn One of Few Area Tennis Teams Without A Home

Twelve area tennis teams have hit the courts in recent weeks. At least eleven of them have found a home, and Quinn is the only one without a matchplace.

It's a problem for Quinn, as the team is one of the few area teams without a home. With games scheduled against Haverford for the remainder of the season, Quinn is trying to find a suitable venue.

However, the team is optimistic. "We'll find a place to play," says Coach Mark Johnson. "We're not going to let a lack of a home court stop us."
