Pennsylvania's varsity heavyweight oarsmen, second place finishers to Yale in the Eastern Association of American Universities regatta, will not travel to Henley, England, for competition for the Grand Challenge Cup. It was learned yesterday.

Athletic Director Jeremiah H. Ford, III, cited the fact that the criterion on which the decision is made as to whether to send the oarsmen to England is the existence of the E. A. R. C. championship, and since the Quaker oarsmen did not accomplish this, the administration feels they do not warrant the expense.

The Quaker oarsmen did not perform well enough in their regattas preceding the Eastern for the administration to consider them "hot stuff" and send them overseas anyway. The crew, which finished third in the Philadelphia Cup Regatta, second in the Eastern Association of American Universities regatta, and second in the Eastern Intercollegiate Championships, was defeated by the Yale team 5-0.

Attention was centered on Penn when the regatta was scheduled, but it was not taking the race because of the weather conditions. The weather was so much traveling in the last few days that no sailing was possible and the March weather was not conducive to the Olympics on the Schuylkill.

It now seems definite that no second varsity Eight will be sent, and while the first Quakers will compete in Henley and the only American varsity Eight which will make the trip will be the Princeton crew will rank among the finest in the nation.

Five Team Effort

Like the Yale Eight, the Penn Eight was the sole of one of the finest team efforts that have ever been produced in a long while.

Penn's championship jayvee crew which races against ivies has also had plenty of trouble in its line-up in the last few weeks. However, the victory in the final over Navy and the win by ten seats over Yale in the final, is considered the second successful effort in the last thirteen strokes by Harveys.
Food For Thought

by Robert Israelloff

The academic year of 1957-58 was a relatively quiet one for Pennsylvania as far as sports went. The mountaineers had a lull season and many of the teams were in positions that could be described as hopeless. However, that all changed come January 1958 when the Mountaineers started winning.

The Mountaineers' football team, under the able guidance of Coach Spear, was able to win two games that season: one against Penn State and the other against Notre Dame. These victories were unexpected, and the team's performance was considered a major upset of the year.

The basketball team also had a successful season, winning a number of games and reaching the NCAA tournament for the first time in years. The team was led by All-American selection Bill Russell and featured other standout players such as John Havlicek and Tom Monday.

The baseball team, under the leadership of Coach Joe Galvin, had a strong season, capturing the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) championship. The team's success was attributed to their strong pitching and defense, as well as the timely hitting of players such as Tony Oliva and Joe Morgan.

Overall, the 1957-58 academic year was one of great success for the Mountaineers, with many teams achieving unexpected victories and reaching new heights in their respective sports. The Mountaineers' athletic department had much to celebrate, and the school was proud of their accomplishments.
