Auto Contract Disappoints Taylor; Agreement No Major Breakthrough

By ROBERT A. GROSS

The recent contract agreement in the automobile industry will not be effective in reducing unemployment and in producing a stable labor situation, according to Dr. George Taylor, professor of industry, yesterday.

No major breakthrough has been made in the auto agreements, said Dr. Taylor, commented on an interview with The Daily Pennsylvanian, "although there has been an effort to create new jobs. This effort, however, will not be very successful.

The automobile contract between Chrysler and Ford and the United Auto Workers provides specifically for early retirement, increasing demand and inflationary pressures.

The incentive to accelerate retirement, said observers, will lead to a creation of more jobs and a reduction of unemployment.

But, according to Dr. Taylor, the retirement provisions are no different from the steel industry's granting 13 week vacations to a small percentage of its workers. These methods to reduce unemployment may not lead to an inflationary situation.

No patterns will be set throughout the economy by the automobile agreements, said the industry professor, because "in many industries workers don't want to foreign wage increases, like the automobile workers have done for a one year period."

Inflationary Pressures

Because the auto agreements will lead to about a 4.7% increase in company costs, some observers have feared that the settlement will be inflationary. This figure results from the fact that the President's "non-inflationary" guideline of 3.2% increase has been broken by the contracts.

But, according to Taylor, "the automobile agreements will not lead to an inflationary situation."

We're worried that the problem of inflation is growing in size, because the Council of Economic Advisers has predicted that inflation will not lead to an inflationary situation.

The guidelines have been handled and distorted in their meaning, he commented.

Other inflationary factors will pressure the economy, Taylor said, the shortage of high-quality production. The shortage of skilled workers and increasing demand upon the economy will be the factors creating inflationary pressures in the economy, he continued.

But forces other than the auto contract will be more determinative of inflation, not in general but specifically.
Letters To The Editor

Editor, The Daily Pennsylvania:

Be Victor Filler's article in the October 7th DP, let me parallel that journalistic worker's style with the following:

"When Victor stumbled down the walk, he left the impression that he is not one of the more prepossessing of staff members. Although from certain angles preferably rear profile, he exhibits a certain ruggedness, he would probably be classified as quite a lonely individual. He looks something like Dorothy Kilgallen, with pointed nose and missing chin, combined in a ludicrous combination, and his reporter's smirk actually is quite similar to the Mickey Mouse smirk caricatured by the Walt Disney cartoonists.

He is a puny fellow, almost of chess player dimensions. Although he has been a sad girl one of the most genial and affable of reporters, he looks like the type that would not choose to meet anybody in an alley on a dark night. (Unless it were Eugene Debs). Mr. Filler is not cut out for kissing (or anybody).

This sort of thing is a little ridiculous, don't you agree? Applied to me with a straight face as Victor Filler is, it is merely humorous. But if personal attacks and innuendoes become the sole tools for a discussion of the man who could, conceivably, become the President of the United States, a question can be raised regarding the standards of the newspaper which employs such tactics.

This article was not front-page material. Victor Filler is obviously not a first rate reporter, nor is he even a logical thinker, as this rather poorly reasoned article attests.

But I don't believe Victor Filler should give up writing. I would suggest that he, Mr. Art ("Are You Washed in the Blood of the Lamb?") Shapiro, and Herb-box, the deformed editorial cartoonist, get together and publish their own newspaper. This publication would obviously give The National Enquirer and The Daily Worker a run for their money. Indeed, if their publication had been in existence one or two years ago, Lee Harvey Oswald wouldn't have had time to read The Militant for his daily diet of hate and corruption. And perhaps he wouldn't have stopped with merely killing our late beloved President...

How does that sound, Mr. Filler?

The weather in Ithaca on Saturday was freezing cold. Winds blazed over the Cornell campus, the frigid half of that being exposed, and the frigid east forth snow intermittedly throughout the day. Penn fans struggled to keep warm by whatever means was available to them. The Cornell twowinders, a tie and a sportcoat; others wore a warm Cornell scarf and no other clothing carefree of all warmed their viscera with a pint of hot whiskey.

For the Penn football team absolutely nothing went right. To begin with, they showed up on the field wearing short sleeve shirts. This was a bad move worth ten points at least to Cornell. The Big Red came out with short sleeves, being quite a hit in the Polar Bear climate.

If you don't expect too much, it's hard to be disappointed. Sometimes you might even be pleasantly surprised.

Therefore, the United States has nothing to gain by cultural exchanges of any sort, discussions, or treaties. The United States must elevate its military power is preparing for a struggle that will destroy one of the competing systems. Our country must increase, not lessen, world tensions to bring about total victory for our system.

The main weakness of the Russian thinkers is that it fails to communicate. The Moscow Peking split is not just a political split. It has an ideological basis over the interpretation of Marxism.

Bennett Union. The U.S.S.R. has, in fact, turned its back on the Marxist concept of a violent revolution in favor of a non-violent\n bland of communism based on an incentive system. Within a few years, collective farms will be a thing of the past, replaced by a more efficient (and much more exploiting) system based on individual ownership. In industrial reforms will also take place and will put an emphasis upon human interest (in an idea completely ignored by Marx). The Soviet Union under Khrushchev is a far cry from the Soviet Union under Lenin. To deny this is to deny reality.

The present Democratic approach to foreign affairs is by far the more realistic of the two methods. It recognizes the changes occurring in the world and promises that the United States ought to take full advantage of them. It is based on more realistic and far sighted premises thus it is responsible to the world community. And it is in this far-sightedness that the necessity for the election of Lyndon B. Johnson.

"I've seen Hitler's rise to power. Today I'm seeing the same thing in the United States. It is this anti-communist obsession which can become fatal to the Americans as it became fatal to the Germans. The accepted fascism because Hitler made it work in Germany is a lesson to the Americans by constant warnings. Today, the politically-minded portion of the electorate is of Senator Goldwater, who is attracted to 'Jedgar phrases and crude words.'"

When creating a short story or novel, the author is residence said that although she does not begin with a specific formula, "something wonderful happens" when the characters are put down on paper: they just "get going." With an anecdote she emphasized this point. "An author arrived at a party with tears in his eyes. It seemed that the night before his heroine had committed suicide.

Harter To Make Adjustments As '55's Pop For Rutgers

By GUY M. BLYNN

The Monday after is always a gloomy time for a football coach whose team has lost the gamethe Saturday before. This gloominess is further compounded if the game happened to be the first one of the year and happened to be done in the next two weeks before the Rutgers meet Penn.

There are going to have to be a lot of changes, said Harter, "we can't go with the same old game for two years."

Both the ball game, Prince-town and Lehigh charged by Terry Brown, as they were generally in command of the game in Lehigh's territory and thus were generally in command of the game for two years.

Before the ball game, Prince-town and Lehigh were generally in command of the game, but the defense, as a whole, could have been in command of the game. What we need is about five tackles were missed all day long.

Brown would catch a reverse or a short pass and White consistently rolled up big yards on the defensive backs. The one weakness in the defense and the lead. A few minutes later, Dan O'Grady intercepted a pass and ran it back to the Bruins' 46 yard line. From there, fullback Mer-

cine broke loose on a 45 yard run to give the Elis a touchdown. In other Ivy League football games for two years."

Cornell Upsets D.P. Selectors

Being sentimentalists, the D. P. football selectors, with the exception of John Jaffe, picked Penn to defeat Cornell. The expected, however, happened, as Cornell ran over the Quakers. Despite this error, Al Richman was still able to predict the re-results of other three Ivy conference contests, and was the only one to have three winners.

Although not by League football games, Yale spawned by Brown behind the fine running of Chuck Mercier, Losing 7-0 in the first half, Pennsylvania re-marched to the Bruins' 46 yard line. From there, fullback Mer-cine broke loose on a 45 yard run to give the Elis a touchdown. Grant then passed to McCar-ter for the two-point conversion and the lead. A few minutes later, Des O'Grady intercepted Richman's pass to give Yale the ball on the Brown 14. The Elis then scored the clincher and locked up the game.

At Baker Field in New York, the contest between Harvard and Columbia was even closer. The game was scoreless until the final 29 seconds. However, in the last minute of the game, Columbia's nos-sure was kicked from the field goal from the 19, enabling Harvard to defeat Columbia by a 1-0 margin.

However, the game was anything but a defensive battle. The U.S. players hustle and engage in for the terrific news team, cited their unorthodoxy as being the distinction of being the worst player in the game.
