No Germ Warfare Test Tube Found; Controversy from Misunderstanding

By PHILIP ARKOW

Vance Packard, on Wednesday night, said some of the "snooping" and "surreptitious scrutiny" of students' privacy in the "naked society" has been used for investigative functions. He described "bugged" conference rooms in Washington and New Hampshire as "secret research. It still is not clear what was meant by 'secret'.

Wi...
The Naked Classroom

The honor system is back. And Vance Packard is probably happy.

The University Council, a faculty-administration body which decides much of the University's internal policies, has decided to continue the system for one more year. A six-member student panel will study the system as it works in the classroom.

This year will probably be the last time opponents of the honor system will get a chance to thwart it. If it comes one back another time, we can probably count on our grandchildren's observing it.

Why is Vance Packard happy? He first came to the University over 30 years ago to represent his high school in the Penn Relays. At that time, and until 1965, University proctors scrutinized every exam taker to see if he made any false moves.

Packard returned Wednesday to a non-naked society which allows its students to work without questioning their integrity. We hope he finds us still clothed if he returns.

Fill Those Stands

The second year of Penn's athletic revitalization begins tomorrow at 1:30 P.M. when the Pennsylvania Quakers open the football season against Lehigh.

Football at the University is different than football at other schools. Coach Odell and his players deserve our support.

This season shapes up as a difficult one for Pennsylvania. Every team in the league appears stronger than last year. But the Quakers can be expected to bring the same style of exciting football to Franklin Field as last season.

In one short year the football team has managed to rekindle school spirit and give students a good reason to take pride in their school. Coach Odell and his players deserve our enthusiasm and support. The University community and we hope tomorrow's victory will be the springboard to another successful season.

The Daily Pennsylvanian is published Monday through Friday at Philadelphia, Pa. during the fall and spring semesters, except during vacation periods, and the last seven class days of each term. One issue is published in August. Subscriptions may be ordered at Sergeant Hall, 34th and Chestnut Streets, at the rate of $10.00 per annum. Second class postage paid at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
papers throughout the country. The coed lost the battle, but the victor of the war will be decided in the Supreme Court or perhaps by the Supreme Court of the land.

On June 28, anette Lesley Buchanan, managing editor of the University of Oregon's Daily Emerald, was convicted and fined $300 on contempt of court charges stemming from her refusal to divulge the names of seven news sources.

The names are those of seven students at the University of Oregon interviewed by Miss Buchanan, in connection with experiences in the use of marijuana. The interview was published in the April 24 edition of the Emerald under the banner headline “Students Condone Marijuana to.”

The boldface editor’s note which preceded the story identified the seven as being marijuana using students at the University of Oregon and indicated that the names used in the text of the story were fictitious.

Miss Buchanan’s problem became apparent when Lane County grand jury Attorney William Frye demanded Miss Buchanan reveal the names of her anonymously interviewed students. The coed coed refused to reveal her sources and stood behind the objections of keeping sources of information confidential. Some states in the union provide shield laws of the type journalists’ protection, but Oregon is among the 37 states which do not.

Told “Other Side”

The idea behind the interview, Miss Buchanan said, was to get the “other side” of an issue which in the last has captured newspaper headlines throughout the country. The Daily Emerald had previously carried several reports of the dangers of drug use, but in connection with experiences in the use of marijuana. The interview was published in the April 24 edition of the Emerald under the banner headline “Students Condone Marijuana to.”

Cass McGuire

BY RANDY SWARTZ

Irish playwright Brian Friel unites the qualities of lyric prose that have been the hallmark of his fellow countrymen, especially Sean O’Casey, with a dynamic approach to the medium. Similar to Brecht and his Epic Theatre, he has come up with an entirely refreshing concept.

His first play, “Philadelphia Here I Come,” a big success still on Broadway, is the story of a young man who plans to leave Ireland and start his life anew in the Quaker City. Friel had two actors playing the role of the young man, which is quite novel. One represents the inner man, the conscience and spirit, and the other plays the outer man, the facade we all create when facing the dictates of society.

In “The Loves of Cass McGuire,” which opened Monday at the Forrest, Friel has switched the situation by having a 70-year-old, whiskey drinking, foul-mouthed, likeable, “kick away from skid row” New York waiter return to her native Ireland after a 52-year separation from her family.

Oscar Nomination

Ruth Gordon, who this year received an Oscar nomination for a similar role in “Inside Daisy Clover,” plays the title role with a practiced sense of timing and movement that is Cass McGuire.

Dennis King plays Mr. Ingram, a man broken by the lost love of his youth. His is a touching, poignant portrayal, as is that of Brenda Forbes, Tribe Costello, who must live down the memory of an alcoholic father.

Like “Philadelphia Here I Come,” this play doesn’t have a plot per say because Friel never intended to “tell” a story. “Cas’s McGuire” is a battleground where the forces of reality, present and past, slug it out with a recreated dream world. It is a fight to remain alive when you are getting old and have nothing or anybody to live for.

For 52 years Cass has been sending home $5 a month to a family who didn’t need it. They didn’t need her either, so she is sent off to a “rest home” soon after she arrives in Ireland.

Cass at times stops the play, talks to the audience, or daydreams out loud while someone else is talking to her. Cass undergoes a different time. Sounds a little like Brecht doesn’t it? Perhaps a bit confusing?

The first act may throw you for awhile, but Friel does something for an expressed purpose and should be crystal clear what, where, and why everything is happening when it happens.

For example, it is important that the audience realize that they represent a hold on the real world. Cass can no longer see or talk to us we know she has lost that hold. There are countless other effective device; used which demand something more than just simulation and foraging if the baby sitter is throwing a party in their home.

“Cass McGuire” is rich in many harmonic elements and levels. There is the smooth music of Mr. Friel’s dialogue, sharp imagery, and many distinct and rosy moments of comic, human weak neat, joy, and beauty seasons the play bringing forth a unique flavor in theatrical communication.

It is carefully structured, yet does not have the traditional side, action, climax and falling motion lines. Throughout the play there is only the question of what will become of Cass McGuire.

Spins a Yarn

Mr. Friel has a way with spinning a yarn and the opportunity presents itself time and again. He has Mr. Friel tell of a past distorted by the dream world in which they both live.

The play is temporarily suspended as the audience gets caught up in the imaginary histories. In a brief moment Friel creates an atmosphere of the past that is so real with the actors the conclusion of both stories the audience responded with well deserved applause.

It looks like Ireland has given the world yet another great playwright.

OFFICIAL NOTICES

All undergraduate activities must register with the Office of the Dean of Men by today, 117 Logan Hall. FROM THE OFFICE OF THE DEAN OF MEN

We are all looking forward to the opening of the football season tomorrow. The enthusiasm of the campus will be even more concentrated in the stands.

Along with the obvious enthusiasm, a word of caution. Penn men have traditionally acted as gentlemen with few exceptions. On some occasions in the past however, this image has been spoiled by the throwing of orange juice at the first game. This is something that is up to all of us to prevent.

Forecasting the final order of finish in the Ivy Football League has developed into a most difficult task through the years. Every fall, just before the teams play in the Ancient Eight, any number of football experts and non-experts sit down to publish the order in which “the Ivy League will finish.” And, to true, our form, we are going to join our fellow members of the fourth estate out on that proverbial limb from which so many have and will fall with resounding thuds.

But, at the same time we are putting our necks over the chopping block, the Daily Pennsylvanian is releasing the results of an informal survey conducted among the Ivy coaches. In this polling of the men who should be the best informed, we asked for a rating of all the Ivy teams except the coach’s own squad. With all the head coaches saving one report, a pretty good indication of where the talent lies is the result.

Without exception, Bob Blackman’s Dartmouth Indians were named as the team to beat. The defending Lambert Trophy winners, as one coach put it, “are a well balanced team and has everybody back.” About the only person around who isn’t sure of the Big Green’s title claim is Blackman himself. The Dean of Ivy Coaches, in terms of longevity, has consistently bemoaned the fact that his squad lacks the depth he would like.

The Hanoverians, however, feature twenty-three returning lettermen including one of the most potent squads in the league. Leading the Indians will be premier quarterback Mickey Beard, a fine line coach who should be the best informed, we asked for a rating of all the Ivy coaches.
