Mensa Test Initiated at University

Mensa, an international organization for people with IQs of 132 or better, will hold its first campus meeting this afternoon at 1:30 in the Franklin Room of Houston Hall.

The speaker at this afternoon's meeting will be Mensa member Dr. Max Fogel, a contributing psychologist at the University, who will talk on "Creativity and Intelligence." The preliminary entrance test will be distributed at the meeting. This test is taken unsupervised, mailed to the Mensa office in New York, and graded. The Mensa will then notify the applicant whether it would be wise for him to take a supervised third IQ test.

Mensa was founded in Britain in 1945 and now has over 15,000 members, over two-thirds of whom are Americans. The first admission test required for becoming an M (male Mensa member) or a F (a female member) is to score 132 or better on the standard California test. No other distinction is made.

Mensa's main purpose is to provide contact between its members and serve as a tool for social and psychological research. There are many special interest groups in the society, as well as many special activities.

Russell Appleyard, a University Mensa member who organized the first meeting, invites "not only students (female ones too) but faculty also, to come to the meeting."

SCUE Arranges Pre-registration Advising To Acquaint Students With Spring Courses

The Student Committee on Undergraduate Education (SCUE) will establish a mechanism for course advising today in the West Lounge of Houston Hall.

"The fact is that the administration has never established an adequate means for us to prepare students for the spring semester since the proeposal in the SCUE report has been delayed.

The advising center will have tentative syllabi for a large number of spring courses including reading lists and descriptions of course and paper requirements. It is hoped that the lounge will be divided into sections corresponding to the various departments in the University.

SCUE will provide a mechanism whereby students can advise one another on the courses presented in the spring semester. The project depends on the participation of students in information about the courses they have taken and plan to take.

Marder noted that the universal knowledge of the choices at preregistration should be a sufficient stimulus to make the students attend.

SCUE believes that the primary responsibility for course advising lies with the administration but that the students will take the responsibility into their own hands since the administration has not provided preregistration aid, said Marder.

He noted that casual nature of the course advising system should attract the students. SCUE anticipates administration participation in providing adequate knowledge of courses and professors by the following semester, added Marder.

The Committee finds it disturbing that the system was presented a "veiled threat" that "something terrible might happen during drop and add period," said Marder.

He noted that SCUE opposes the idea of an unmentioned threat and said that if only increases the importance of an advising system.

The University will set out and continue until 5, today and throughout Wednesday. Marder requested that the professors who are teaching courses in the spring semester and have not yet submitted course syllabi should do so by noon today.

Referendum Set for Wed. On New Govt.

The fate of coeducational Student Government will be decided tomorrow and Thursday by an undergraduate referendum on the proposed Government constitution.

Voting hours are scheduled for 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. in Houston Hall and 9 a.m. to 7 p.m. in McClelland and Dietrich Halls.

Approval by a majority of men and two-thirds of the women is required to establish the new government.

The leading advantage of the coeducational constitution, Government leaders have said, is that it prevents duplication of effort, and allows individual assemblies to concentrate their efforts on more specialized fields, promoting greater interest and responsibility among members of the Student Government.

The new constitution also alters the method of holding elections, required the full version of the text to apply disciplinary proceedings.

first-rate people to do some of our thinking for us.

Think about it.

In our business—information technology—we need knowledge, intelligence, logic, creativity, a sense of humor, and a sense of seriousness—not necessarily in that order. If your major is mathematics, physics, electronic engineering, or marketing, we need you.

We're working on projects so advanced, they won't be in the textbooks until we write them. Projects like advanced work in data management systems, associative memory utilization, systems simulation and evaluation, multi-processing systems, operating systems and digital communications.

The rewards are great if you can make it. An advanced degree and/or background in computer-related subjects will give you a head start.

Visit your placement office now and make an appointment to meet our representative on campus Wednesday, November 2nd. Or, send your resume directly to us, attention of Mr. Bud Garner.

They have lived in the mountains of Viet Nam for hundreds of years and have grown to detest any power that challenges their regional hegemony. They ask only that either the Viet Minh or the French colonialists, all the time agreed that whoever commanded a supply pack on the black market.

In their briefings, the ROTC cadets believed that the Vietnamese had captured two Montagnards but the Montagnards had absconded with the supplies. They had been more concerned with the strictly military lessons taught by the exercise.

Cadet Henry Dick, the compass of one supply column was more concerned with his skillful use of the instrument than with the disappearance of the Montagnards. "We got through on the far right where the MS-3's weren't properly extended," he said that he didn't know what had happened to the Montagnards.

Some faculty advisors also were not exactly sure why the Montagnards had been abandoned with the supplies. Through it all they seemed to have been more concerned with giving away their positions.

"Wait for them," he continued, "and when they get to you, then you can kill them."

Sergeant Major Jack Hollifield knew the Montagnards had disappeared but didn't know why.

Three of those political science people got lost," he said. "We determined that they got lost intentionally so we watched the rest of them. In fact the patrol commander put guns at their backs.

Athletics and Education: Part Two

Guy M. Blyn

If one accepts the notion that the future lies in inter-collegiate athletics as a total educational process, as Director of Athletics Jeremiah Ford II argues, then it is necessary to provide athletics with its proper place in the total program of the University.

An important first step in this direction is the arguing down of the traditional "opposition from faculties." We must "disdose a few from the intellectual and moral bankruptcy of the classrooms in general and their own classrooms in particular."

Ford continues, "For the benefit of those faculty members who require persuasion that athletics can be education, I would argue with more fancy than logic that:

Not One But Three"

"All Johnny Undergrad . . . is divided into three parts. In one part he is scholar, in another athlete, in the third, a playboy. In all three parts he is at least four steps which must be taken by all colleges and universities."

"Most faculties accept only the responsibility for Johnny's education as a scholar. They tolerate him with regulation as an athlete and as a playboy but educate him in the arts of recreation under the paternal scrutiny of the dean of men."

Ford points out that not all educational institutions have maintained a similar posture in this area. He refers to our own Ivy League as an area which has,"deodorized him, (the Athlete), demerit rating as a scholar and as a playboy, - a group in which we can hate enough to beat each other, but trust enough to schedule each other."

President has stated that, "Participation in athletics is a part of the American educational process."

Ford's Four Points

In order to place the proper emphasis on athletics, Ford sees at least four steps which must be taken by all colleges and universities.

The first of his four points is that "we must choose and evaluate coaches on the same basis as faculty members. We must grant coaches faculty tenure in line with faculty practice or a series of contracts leading up to a contract for life. We must stop sending coaches to the sidelines when they cause fumble away victories on the goal line." "Universities do not fire teachers whose students flunk the course, and so they should not do so to coaches whose teams are chronic losers."

While this point undoubtedly does not meet with universal approval, it is obvious that a policy of changing coaches every two years under pressure that athletics can be education."

Penn Basketball Squad Begins Practice Today

The Penn basketball team, defending Ivy League champions, will open the 1966-67 season with practice tomorrow night under new head coach Dick Harter. The Red and Blue will work to get back from last year's team and will be faced with a new program.

Harter, an assistant coach at Penn for seven years before he was named as head coach at Rider, will not be a stranger to his squad. Harter coached the veterans, many of whom the squad had faced many of the sophomores he will be counting on this year. In his first year at Rider, also expected to be a rebuilding campaign, Harter led his team to a fine 16-9 record.

Returning for Penn are two big men, 6-9 Frank Burgess and 6-10 Tom Marinovich; backcourt performers Pete Andrews, Steve Perras, and Dan Lipinski. Also, available this fall will be 6-5 junior Larry Frank who was forced to sit out last season with a broken ankle.

Pen opens its season on December 1, hosting a strong Rutgers team at the Palestra.

The more promising sopho are forwards Ken Leson, Charlie Snell and Jeff Gowans and backcourt performers Pete Andrews, Steve Perras and Dan Lipinski. Odell Not Distressed Over Loss; Expect Knowlton Back for Yale

By LARRY KROHN

While the statistics reveal some glaring weaknesses in the Quaker football squad, Bob Odell was not unduly alarmed at Penn's weekend loss to Harvard.

"We lost just as we did last week against Princeton," the skipper said. "Our defense failed to take advantage of some key opportunities and forfeited any chance for victory."

Odell had nothing but admiration for the Harvard game with a lamentation of broken and injured backs. Rick Owens and tackle Henry Smith, hurt earlier in the game, and backfielder Bill Creeden's ankle, injured at Cornell, is now almost completely healed, according to Frey, a fact well supported by the Crimson's 193 yards passing show at Cambridge.
