Plethora of proposals pushed to ameliorate maelstrom of malaise

by JORDAN ZEY

The securer that brought hope to Chicago and north and south to Los Angeles students. For a Democratic Society at the University.

Some 90 SDS chairmen from the two other major radical campus groups. While Resistance and the Vietnam Week Committee have maintained its activities on the Pennsylvania State University campus for a number of years, neither group has been able to make a significant impact on the campus community. But the Campus Republicans have formed a strong bloc of SDS, temporarily rallied around the chair of group.按摩

"Although we have no work with the Vietnam Week Committee, their work is very important," said one of the SDS members.

The new SDS chapter has emerged from the present position as the labor of the growing SDS. "It's a good idea," said one SDS member. "The whole thing will be on campus before this semester.

"All old SDS persons want to continue our work. The new SDS will be very important to the campus community."
To move the nation

Rites of passage: For a striking, holding, gripping ching that just won't come. To put into practice the burning gut issues of the day flared and died in Miami and Chicago (picket fences look a lot like HHH symbols). Now is the time for the campus to be the big city. In the language of the African continent, the gesture of the hands is called 'waving.' To move the nation one must..."

Freshman week

1968 has been given to the University to establish the Rose and Samuel Jeanette Anspach Institute for Diplomacy and International Relations. The $100,000 gift was announced yesterday by Mrs. Jeanette Anspach.

The money was the bequest of the late Mary Jeanette Sn, Anspach of Philadelphia, a 1920 graduate of the School of Foreign Affairs and Diplomacy, as well as to train additional career officers to the University. The new student week included

Experience and depth are key to successful cross country season

SPORTS

By Mark Schlesinger

With games resuming between the two groups of about 80 men, the Penn cross country team is looking forward to a successful season under new head coach Jeff Tupper.

Since assuming the coaching duties for cross country and track-and-field, Tupper's runners have improved considerably in practice. Tupper's approach to training has changed the program for the better.

In the past, the team has tried to do too much. Tupper's approach is to focus on key races and to improve on specific aspects of the runners' performances.

The team's improvements are evident in the early season. In the opening meet, the team's top runners showed an increase in speed and endurance.

Tupper has been an assistant coach at Pennsylvania State University and is well respected in the running community. His philosophy on training is based on building a strong foundation of fitness before focusing on speed.

Tupper's approach has helped the team to achieve success in recent years. The team has placed in several major meets and has qualified for the national championships.

The team's success is due in large part to the dedication of the runners and the guidance of Tupper. With a strong group of returning runners and new talent on the team, Tupper is confident that the team will continue to improve and achieve success in the upcoming season.
