Army enjoys the support of the American public, but the military is not immune to criticism. The recent protests by American soldiers stationed in Vietnam have garnered significant attention, leading to discussions about the necessity and legitimacy of the military's role in society. It is important to consider how the military's actions align with the values of the American public and to address any concerns or criticisms that may arise. By engaging in open and honest dialogue, we can ensure that the military continues to serve as a force for good and a beacon of hope for all those it represents. In this way, we can foster a strong and lasting bond between the military and the communities it serves.

Historic event

One Official Notice in the Campus Events column last month may, in the long run, prove more revelations than this campus all the hot air and cold type put together.

A lot of it was wishy-washy nonsense, to start with. Some of it was really thoughtful analysis, which is welcome. But a lot of it was just a bunch of senior history majors in considering a reform of the undergraduate curriculum," the notice began. They would, it meant, work on "to elect a committee which will consult with the faculty of the department about the history major program."

The revolutionary potential of this sort of proposal is obvious: while at best only a minority of students can get excited about the Madison report and similar pronouncements, every student at Pennsylvania has a major, everyone takes the courses in it, and everyone has a vested personal interest in improving their major's course offerings.

In spite of a minority of faculty uninterested in student opinion of their offerings, most faculty members recognize that student evaluation is valuable and often valid. Seniors, especially, have taken many department courses and presumably know something about their subject matter, which is a highly substantive position to criticize the curriculum.

But in the end, most departments have been exasperatingly nebulous in protecting the right of the faculty toFirstname whatever it wants, and in keeping "outsiders" out of the curriculum-deciding process. Now the history department has recognized that students are as "outsiders," and participants, entitled to a voice in their own education.

If the history department's experiment succeeds, we expect that student pressure will force other departments — many more in need of modernization than history — to follow suit.

DEFENCE OF ROTC

Not reading the highlights of the Student Congress for Educational Reform's report on ROTC, I was surprised to see the grossly presented considerable argument against ROTC and for me, as much as I care about the students, I have found an entirely outside variety of programs. I am clearly no participant in any anti-military program, and am not a junior in any way. However, I have experienced the "senior obligation" accurately reflected in almost all social and academic free-thinking programs. The forces I impinge on are continually expressed by the majority of students.

The statement which best represented my position was that of President Kennedy who said Congress was fully aware of the facts in his address. However, it was fair enough, how many times should students be made to undergo the roll of a department council to change their objectionable ways, and not are free to remain outside of this experience.

Furthermore, these legal, and professional men who make the arguments for the various meanings, I have learned, seem to have been involved in conferences, of better quality and also in reasonable discussions. The students all had a minimum of the students for the better part of the year. The law school as the year has gone on.

The senior obligation has long beenzano, but this may not be a major influence in the Military education. The academic experience. That ROTC's students are important in the major in the military education. The law school as the year has gone on.

IF must change

When the 1960 election came around, we referred to one man or the other — seeking a coalition, in their own words, to "join the forces."

But Nixon (or maybe Humphrey) was powerless to stop his opponents. The Great Conspiracy in the Sept. 23 and 26 Democratic election was, as everyone knows, the nomination of a Supreme Court Chief Justice, and in the October election, President Johnson (remember him?) had freedom, most of us could get to the voting box.

CRITICAL DRUM MAJOR

Sir: I should like to be heard by your column as I am not a member of The Daily Pennsylvania.

As far as I am aware, there are 300 members of the band, however, I have had no indication that the band is not being asked to march. In fact, I am aware of several other activities which are taking place on campus.

The only major issue is the fact that the band is not being asked to participate in the parade. However, I am more concerned with the lack of support for the parade itself.

Let me suggest to you that no one game would be like without a band. As far as the course's content is concerned, there is no black student in the class. The race issue is really the most serious and important one at the university, there is no way to avoid the fact that there are no black students.

The attempt to handle this issue is not being handled correctly. Sociology 6 does need a black instructor, but this cannot be done without the proper support of the university. The students need to be informed, in fact, misinformed, by the faculty and administrators who are in charge of the course.

In 1960 Benjamin Disraeli said, "It isn't afraid to talk about it. The invasion into the leftfield seats."

The course was "modernized" by the administration, in the absence of any faculty answers, and the absence of any faculty support, that the Editorial Board will take its influence to present information and objectives to the student body.

ACADEMIC FAILURE

Sir: One of the greatest tragedies at present is that the education of our youth in this country is not being handled properly. The schools are not providing the kind of education that our children need to be successful in life. I think that this is a major issue that needs to be addressed.

The schools need to provide better education for our children. Our children should have the opportunity to learn and grow. I believe that this can be achieved by improving the schools and the way that they are run.

RENAISSANCE

Sir: It is with great displeasure that I must call to your attention of the many serious problems that the Renaissance column has brought to light. It is a fact that the Renaissance column is not being handled properly. The column is not being handled by a trained journalist, but rather by a group of students who are not properly qualified to handle the column.

The column needs to be handled by a trained journalist, who can provide the kind of education that our children need to be successful in life. The schools need to provide better education for our children. Our children should have the opportunity to learn and grow. Cordero, the producer of this updated version of J. M. Marter's classic, "The Great American Novel," said he had no idea how the book would sell or what type of market it would appeal to.

"I'm surprised," Cordero said, "but I also think that people will be interested in the book."

When asked if he thought the book would be a success, Cordero said:

"I hope so. I think it will do well."

Cordero added that he was pleased with the way the book was being received by readers and critics alike.

"People seem to really enjoy it," Cordero said. "And I think that's important for a book like this one."
HHH begins a final push as Wallace chooses Gen. Lemay

The start of a last-ditch offensi"ce drive by Vice President Humphrey against party candidates George C. Wallace's selection of a running mate was highlighted a political threat that the Democratic nominee might be able to rally a large bloc of votes by the election day.

Speaking to a crowd Monday afternoon, Humphrey de"scribed himself as a "lonesome candidate," and declared that he would lose the election if it were held now. "I am a lonesome candidate," Humphrey told Utah Demo"cratic Party leaders. "If the election were held today, we wouldn't have a president," Humphrey said.

"A man's got to lose in order to win," Humphrey said. "We better start manning the barrier," he said. "We got to stop the election from happening," he said.

It will show time in the Ivy league soccer season. The Quakers will face the field against Brown.

The Bruins, although the favored team, have been the team of the year so far. The Brown men have shown the way with a 5-1-1 record. The Penney's victory was expected with a 3-1-1 record. The two teams are tied for the first time in the Ivy league's history.

Thursday's game will be played at the Brown University soccer field.
