THEDA'S DAY

The two-man Pennsylvania minority bloc which disposed Pennsylvania Attorney General Mike Grella in a blindsided coup formally offered Tuesday to walk out after a new calendar, beginning at its usual meeting place, the noon meeting in the IJRA (Institute of Legislation and Research of America) office, in response to the Pennsylvania House of Representatives, which had just announced its intention to refuse to convene Tuesday morning.

The move is part of a broader struggle between the two groups in the Pennsylvania House of Representatives, where the Pennsylvania Attorney General's office has been instituted to challenge the existing system of representation in the House. The Pennsylvania House of Representatives, which was formed in 1968, is made up of 100 members, each representing a district in the state.

The move comes as the House prepared to vote on a bill that would allow the Attorney General's office to review cases of alleged misconduct by elected officials.

The bill, which was introduced by Representative Mike Grella, is supported by both branches of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives, including the Pennsylvania Senate. However, it has not yet been introduced in the Senate.

Defense sparks first major football upset

By AL MARDER

"They just wouldn't go."

But the Big Red gurus were right for the seventh straight week, and for his fifth straight touchdown, by controlling the ball on offense and forcing turnovers on defense. The Big Red blocked a punt, intercepted a pass, and forced a fumble that led to a safety. And Bob Fugelstad, a Quaker fullback, got his first career touchdown, scoring again. "I don't want to use the loss of Sturman as an alibi," said Penn's head coach, Jerry Williams. "All our boys gave their best shot." But the real story lies not in the individual statistics, but in the team's collective effort.

The Quakers now look forward to the Thursday semi-finals with renewed hope, having ended their season with a win. And the 58-yard touchdown pass by Dave Giford to Mike Chwastyk with 1:17 left in the game, was the start of something new.
