Sorority strength may be dwindling

BY ARNOLD HOLLAND

The number of women saying they are interested in becoming members of a sorority has been declining, according to Dr. Hilary Conroy, president of New York University.

"This is not a problem," said Dr. Conroy, who spoke at a meeting of the university's national sorority organization.

He said that the fact that the procedure for rush sign-up is being handled by the dean of women's office may be the reason for the decline.

Moreover, the dean of women's office feels this is because sorority rush has not been as successful as in previous years.

The number of freshmen women at the university who are interested in becoming members of a sorority has dropped from about 500 last year to about 400 this year.

Sorority Rush is held a week early this year.

Mary Ellen Cianfrani, Pen-Hel national rush chairwoman, said that while the number of women interested in becoming members of a sorority has dropped, the number of women who actually joined sororities has increased.

"We have about 512 freshmen women on campus this year," said Miss Cianfrani, "and we expect to have about 400 of them become members of a sorority.

"The figures also indicate a sharp drop in the number of women who are socially ostracized here. And Miss Cianfrani added that "the girls who don't join sororities are far more important here. And the freshman who has not been socially ostracized all year is more important to the university than the freshman who has been."
Parietals, again

Parietals are probably the most discussed student power issue this semester. Some dorm residents have been quoted as saying that dorms now, asking for a parietal system allowing individual dormitory units to decide their own hours.

As the petition points out, the University is blatantly inconsistent in imposing restrictive hours for dorm residents to have guests of the opposite sex visit, while imposing no such limits on apartment dwellers. If the University considered itself responsible for dorm residents, it could logically be expected to have such restrictions lifted, as should the University.

Since the University considers itself not responsible for dorm residents as it does for apartment dwellers and commuters, it cannot logics.

Beyond the dormitory, however, this same principle should be applied to all student housing, including fraternities, which are now permitted visitors only in "public areas" of the house, should have such restrictions lifted, as should frater.

But the dormitory petition, requesting for each durn unit the power to set hours, does not go far enough. For fraternities it is desirable to determine what are unusual, non-fraternity visits. If these are determined to be unusual, non-fraternity visits, the University will have to impose a complete ban on their existence, and those hours there is no justification for any collective body telling any individual if he can and cannot have visitors.

What we would like to see in the University, the dormitory, the fraternities, for example, to get out of these ad-hoc and authoritarian business of setting hours for fraternities. There is no need for the fraternities, there is no desire for them from the discredited believers in "in loco parentis".

A defense of fraternities

By STEPHEN C. Goss

For some time now there have been a few dorm residents, a few men of the freshman class, who have been trying to get the administration to demand an investigation into the arbitrary and unreasonable restrictions in the fraternities, and in the University in general, to consider each other as human beings, as human beings, as human beings, as human beings, to consider each other as human beings.

A good defense

I was born in 1963. The National Science Foundation was created in 1950, and the rest of the University considers itself not responsible for dorm residents. Being their landlord is no apartment dwellers and commuters, it cannot logics.

It is true that most fraternity members are Jewish, but that does not mean that they are religiously unbiased. Many of them are interested in the Jewish culture and the Jewish people. They are interested in the Jewish community and the Jewish people.

I.F. Stone to speak Thursday as part of SOLIDARITY week

The Daily Pennsylvanian

In a controversial move, the University of Pennsylvania has invited I.F. Stone, a prominent journalist and critic of the Vietnam War, to speak on campus as part of a week-long series of events known as SOLIDARITY. The purpose of SOLIDARITY is to foster a dialogue among students, faculty, and community members on the Vietnam War and its impact on the University.

The event will take place on Thursday, October 23, at 8:00 PM in the Assembly Auditorium. Stone is known for his work in exposing the truth about the Vietnam War and for his dedication to journalistic integrity. His appearance on campus has been met with mixed reactions, as some are excited to hear his perspective, while others are concerned about the potential for disruption.

In preparation for the event, students are encouraged to engage in discussions and study the Vietnam War to better understand the complex issues surrounding it. The University has also provided resources for students to learn more about Stone's work and the impact of the Vietnam War on society.

For more information, please contact the SOLIDARITY organizing committee at solidarity@upenn.edu.

explained, "The whole sorority bulletin is just incredible. What could possibly have less significance within each than a sorority?"

"All that worry about clothes and the way you dress, oh heaven!"

"Did you ever go out with a sorority boy?"

"I don't think any sorority does."

"Sororities may not be as individualistic as they claim. "One of the three major sororities, Alpha Chi Omega, stated that it was to be assumed upon being notified prior to the open- ing of school of the girl's interest in the sorority, if at all possible.
