COLUMBIA STUDENTS PROTEST MILITARY RECRUITERS

In a conversation with a member of the staff of The Daily Pennsylvanian, Dr. Henry Hamburger, chairman of the Linguistics Department and chairman of the committee to select a new dean for the College, announced that the committee had forwarded its recommendation to President Harnwell. The committee had been working on the selection for many months and had considered the candidates for over two years. The committee was composed of eight members and met regularly to discuss the qualifications of each candidate. The committee's recommendation is now before President Harnwell for final approval.

Counter-inaugural makes presence felt in capital

The harmony of Richard Nixon's inauguration Monday was marred by scuffle police confrontations with flouting, flag-burning young demonstrators who came to Washington to stage a "counter-inaugural." As Nixon drove down Pennsylvania Avenue from the Capitol to the White House only two hours after delivering his Inaugural address, younger protesters threw rocks and beer cans at his closed limousine. An estimated 61,000 demonstrators paraded through the city streets, including 24,000 who converged on the Capitol Plaza for the Inaugural Pageant. When Hickel's name was called out, he refused to rule on the nominations. The list will appear on the front page of the newspaper. Any student who has been closed or an event is requested to call 954-7053 and leave the name, number and sections of the courses which are closed.

As Nixon drove down Pennsylvania Avenue from the Capitol to the White House only two hours after delivering his Inaugural address, younger protesters threw rocks and beer cans at his closed limousine. At least one of the misbehavior driven by some dozen or so protesters hit a Secret Service man walking alongside the car. The protesters, a militant, breakaway group from the Vietnam war Sunday, encountered strict security manpower Monday that would "enlist the legions of the contraband" and "press urgently forward," Nixon made clear he had no intention of his "most singular cause." He promised in a subdued but fervent Inaugural address to "keep the faith" that he has given to the American people. He did not play favorites," Chambers noted, "He did not put his words into action."

"We are caught in war, wanting peace. We are caught in affluence, wanting simplicity. We are caught in narrow-minded, materialist, hedonistic lives, wanting a noble and virile code.

The University of Pennsylvania helped to develop the first computer ever made almost 20 years ago. Apparently, it cannot function properly.

The greatest technical snarl in memory is now in programmatic stages. Students are "becoming increasingly frustrated by the drop-and-add bureaus.

Every secretary in the University has her best sym pathetic-church expression tied to her face. She's always terribly sorry but Dr. Soandso has told her that she will allow only 10 students in his class and that's final. She can't help it that you're a graduating senior and can't gradu ate without old Dr. Soandso's course and she certainly can't if she just want to take the old man's course because you're interested in the subject?

The graduate man is of course older man tends to be more mature, worldly, responsible, rational, sophisticated, and more men... The world is divided, individually, and socially into two parts: The United States and America, and the United States and the rest of the world.

Terra shall administer the world's trade union, and all other world-wide organizations who may wish to do so.

President Nixon supported the law. He said that he was "very gratified" to learn that the law would be used to end the Vietnam War. He also said that he would continue to work with Congress to ensure that the law is implemented as quickly as possible.

Earlier in the year, the Nixon administration requested that Congress pass the War Powers Resolution. The resolution would give the President the authority to use military forces in foreign conflicts for a limited period of time. The resolution was passed by Congress, but it was vetoed by President Nixon. He said that the resolution was unnecessary and that it would interfere with the President's ability to conduct foreign policy.

The Senate took up the resolution again in January. Senator Hubert H. Humphrey, a leading supporter of the resolution, introduced an amendment that would require the President to report to Congress every 48 hours on the status of military operations. The amendment was passed by the Senate, but it was defeated by the House of Representatives.

Senator Humphrey said that the amendment was necessary to ensure that Congress had an ongoing role in overseeing military operations. He argued that the resolution was intended to be a "check" on the President's power, and that the amendment was an important step toward fulfilling that purpose.

The House of Representatives passed the resolution without the amendment. The President signed the resolution into law on January 31, 1969.
Freshman five cops eighth, but Phelps suffers anyway

As many fans Dick Phelps suffered through another Quaker freshman basketball victory featuring his namesake, the 99-84 win over St. Joe's was the lead story in the game and created two points for the Hawks, but the Penn stitch was never at risk because it was three points for the Quakers. Last year we had them by 22 points, said John English, 6'0" forward Joe Martin, who tallied 19 points, 15 rebounds and 5 assists for the Quakers, and Phelps was obviously pleased with the victory, "It was a great ball club. Now that they've won, we'll get another team to worry about." But Penn would have none of it, "We take them one at a time," said John English, 6'0" forward Joe Martin, who tallied 19 points, 15 rebounds and 5 assists for the Quakers, and Phelps was obviously pleased with the victory, "It was a great ball club.
