Dear Editor,

I would like to respond to the letter of the previous week.

The main point of the letter was to express concern about the quality of the course instructors and their approach to teaching. The writer feels that the instructors are not making the students engage in the material and are not challenging them enough.

I agree with the writer to a certain extent. I believe that the instructors do have a responsibility to make the students think and analyze the material, rather than just regurgitating information. However, I also think that the students have a responsibility to take an active role in their own learning.

One way that instructors can challenge the students is by asking open-ended questions that require critical thinking. Another way is by assigning projects that require the students to apply the material in real-world situations.

I encourage both the instructors and the students to work together to create a more engaging and effective learning environment.

Sincerely,

[Your Name]
